MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

INCOME TAX.

NOTE.—The Act now in force in England is Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), as amended by the annual Finance Acts. These Acts are given the collective short title "the Income Tax Acts" (Finance Act, 1919 (c. 32), s. 28), & are referred to in this Title by their respective years. References to Schedules A–E are to the Schedules of the 1918 Act, as amended by subsequent Acts.

Part I.—Administration.

SECT. 1.—OFFICIALS AND THEIR DUTIES.

SUB-SECT. 1.—GENERAL, ADDITIONAL, EX-OFFICIO AND SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.

See 1918 Act, ss. 57–74.

1. Commissioners—Jurisdiction to decide questions of fact—English company carrying on business partly abroad.—An English co., incorporated under the cos. Acts, had its registered office in the district of Clerkenwell, & there carried on a business, in respect of the profits of which they were chargeable to income tax under Schedule D. by the comrs. for that district. For the purpose of the assessment of the co. in respect of their profits, the comrs. drew the inference of fact that, having regard to the relations existing between the co. & an American co. trading at Rochester in the United States, the bulk of the shares in which was held by the English co., the business & profits of the American co. were technically the business & profits of the English co., that the head, seat, & directing power of the co. were at the registered office in London, & that, if the profits of the business carried on at Rochester were technically the profits of the American co., that co. was for all purposes the agent of the English co. The English co. applied for a writ of prohibition to the comrs. to prohibit them from assessing that co. in respect of the profits of the American co., on the ground that the business of the American co. was not in truth the business of the English co., & that the comrs. therefore had not, & could not by an erroneous decision on the facts give themselves, jurisdiction to assess the English co. in respect of the profits of that business:—Held: the comrs. having jurisdiction under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 106, to assess the English co. to income tax in respect of profits of a business, carried on either wholly or in part only in Great Britain, they had for the purposes of that assessment jurisdiction to decide all questions of fact necessary for ascertaining the amount of those profits, & therefore prohibition would not lie, the proper remedy, if the decision of the comrs. were wrong in point of law, being by appeal upon a case stated.—R. v. CLERKENWELL GENERAL COMRS. OF TAXES, [1901] 2 K. B. 879; 85 L. T. 503; 65 J. P. 724; 17 T. L. R. 744; sub nom. R. v. INCOME TAX COMRS., 70 L. J. K. B. 1010, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 2.—CLERKS, ASSESSORS, COLLECTORS, INSPECTORS AND SURVEYORS.

See 1918 Act, ss. 76–89.

2. Collector—Liability of surety—No return of defaulters.]—If, in an action on a bond given by the sureties of a collector of taxes, there be breaches assigned, that the collector did not pay over money received, & that he did not duly demand & enforce payment of the taxes, it is not necessary, on the part of pltf., to prove exactly what money he received; for if it be proved that he was to collect a certain sum, & that he paid over a smaller sum, & did not take proper steps to exonerate himself from the residue, pltf. will be entitled to recover.

No return is made of any list of defaulters, which should have been done to discharge the collector; & by not returning such a list, persons are enabled to run away, who would otherwise have been obliged to pay their taxes; & therefore the collector is liable for those taxes (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—LOVELAND v. KNIGHT (1828), 3 C. & P. 106, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 597.

3. Invalid appointment.—Sureties in a bond given by a collector of property & income tax, under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), conditioned for the due collection & payment of the sums assessed under the Act, are not liable in respect of moneys collected by him without legal authority, i.e. before he is furnished with the duplicate assessment & warrant to collect, as mentioned in sect. 172 of the Act.

The condition recited that A. "had been duly nominated & appointed a collector for the year ending," etc.; & that duplicates of the assessments had been delivered & given in charge to him, with a warrant or warrants for collecting the same. In an action against the sureties, for A.'s default:—Held: they were not estopped by these recitals from showing that there had been no complete appointment of A. as collector, & the duplicate assessments & warrant to collect had not been delivered to him.—KEPP v. WIGGETT (1850), 10 C. B. 35; 20 L. J. C. P. 49; 16 L. T. O. S. 172; 14 Jur. 1137; 138 E. R. 15.

Annotation:—Mentd. Durham Corpn. v. Fowler (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 394.

4. Increase of risk—Tax increased since bond given.—The condition of a bond, after reciting that "A. had been appointed a collector of the property, income & assessed taxes, which had been or thereafter should be charged or assessed within the parish of D., under & by virtue of the several Acts relating to the said duties," provided, in the usual terms, that the bond should be void if A. should properly discharge the duties of his office. By a subsequent Act the income tax was raised 2d. in the pound:—Held: this alteration in the law increased the risk of the sureties & avoided the bond.—BADGER v. FINCH (1857), 29 L. T. O. S. 88.

PART I.—ADMINISTRATION.

5. Appointment for several parishes.] Under 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, assessors & collectors of assessed taxes may be appointed for districts consisting of several parishes; & it is not incumbent upon the comrs. to appoint separate assessors or collectors for each parish.—CLARK v. LEDGER (1850), 16 L. T. O. S. 124; 14 J. P. Jo. 686.

See 1918 Act, s. 80 (1).

6. — Security — Increase during term of office.]—Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), s. 74, which provides that the Board of Inland Revenue may call for security from a collector of taxes whenever it thinks fit, entitles the Board at any time during a collector's term of office to demand increased security if the Board thinks it desirable to do so.—MAXWELL v. NATHAN (1915), 31 T. L. R. 288.

See 1918 Act, s. 81.

7. Assessors — Appointed for several parishes.]—CLARK v. LEDGER, No. 5, ante.
See 1918 Act, ss. 76, 77.

8. Surveyor — Undertaking to surrender appointment on termination of service—Dismissal—Enforcement of undertaking.]—If a surveyor of taxes, who on his appointment undertakes that on the termination of his service he will on request surrender the document by which he was formally appointed, is justifiably dismissed, the undertaking can be enforced by an order of the ct.—FISHER v. STEWARD (1920), 36 T. L. R. 395.

Exemption from serving certain offices—Collectors & commissioners.]—See 1918 Act, ss. 231, 232.

9. — Persons employed by the Inland Revenue in the collection tax—What constitutes employment.]—A member of a firm of foreign bankers, which carries on business in London & is employed by the Inland Revenue Comrs. in the collection of income tax on foreign dividends & is paid by poundage, is not employed by the Inland Revenue Comrs. within Juries Act, 1870 (c. 77), s. 9, & the Schedule to that Act, & is not officer of income tax has already been appointed assessor under Valuation Acts.—LORD ADVOCATE v. CUNINGHAME DIVISION OF Ayrshire Income Tax General Comrs. (1895), 22 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 986; 32 Sc. L. R. 709; 3 S. L. T. 72.—SCOT.

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

a. Assessment of underwriters—List to be prepared for assessor.]—A firm of underwriters are bound to deliver to the assessor of income tax a list of the persons for whom they conduct the business of underwriting with the names & addresses of such persons, & to include in such list the amount of profit effecting to each person.—LORD ADVOCATE v. GIBB (1906), 8 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 887.—SCOT.

d. Validity of regulations requiring returns.]—HOUSE v. PETERSEN (1899), 25 V. L. R. 240.—AUS.

e. Compulsory return of income—Assessment by commissioners in default of return.]—By the combined effect of Land & Income Tax Assessment & of Income Tax Acts, 1895, a tax is imposed on all incomes exceeding £200, income below that amount not being to income tax. The comrs.

were to give notice requiring all persons liable to taxation to "furnish returns for the purpose of assessment of Land & Income Tax." By a regulation having the force of law "every person in receipt of income within the meaning of the said Acts" is required to make a return. If any person makes default in furnishing such return the comrs. may make an assessment "of the amount on which, in their judgment, tax ought to be charged":—Held: a return must be made of income whether or not it exceeded £200, & in the absence of such return the comrs. were entitled to make a default assessment.—TAXATION COMRS. v. MOONEY, [1907] A. C. 342; 76 L. J. P. C. 64.—AUS.

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.

1. Where demand not received by person to whom addressed.]—Proof of mailing under Income War Tax Act, 1917, s. 8 (1), of a registered letter requiring a return to be made, is only prima facie evidence of receipt of the letter, & even if it appears the letter was delivered by the postmaster to the one who on other occasions had received mail to the person addressed, it is open to the person addressed to show on that ground exempt from jury service.—Ex p. VAN DRUTEN (1913), 30 T. L. R. 198.

See 1918 Act, ss. 98–131.

SUB-SECT. 2.—NOTICE TO PERSON TO BE CHARGED.

10. Necessity for notice — Additional assessment.]—Pltf. was the manager of a limited co. the registered office of which was in the city of London. The co. did no business & pltf. only attended at the co.'s office on rare occasions. The Comrs. of Income Tax for the city of London made an additional assessment under Schedule E. of the Income Tax Acts upon pltf. in respect of the salary paid to him as manager of the co. Notice of the assessment & a written demand for payment were left at the co.'s office, but were not received by, & did not come to the knowledge of, pltf. Pltf. not having paid the tax, a distress was levied in respect thereof at his dwelling-house:—Held: under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), & Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), notice of an additional assessment & a demand for payment must be given to the person sought to be charged; the co.'s office was not pltf.'s "usual or last known place of abode" within sect. 16 (e) of the latter Act, & therefore, no valid assessment had been made upon pltf. & the distress was wrongful.—BERRY v. FARROW, [1914] 1 K. Part II.—Schedule A.

SECT. 1.—APPLICATION OF SCHEDULE.

See 1918 Act, sched. A.

As to property in London, see Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67).

12. Mines—Effect of Revenue Act, 1866 (c. 36), s. 8.]—A colliery co. bought freehold & leasehold coal mines, & raised some of the coal & sold it. At the end of the first years' working the mines, by reason of the coal gotten during the year, were worth £10,424 less than the price for which they were bought. The co., being assessed to the income tax under Schedule D. in respect of the profits of their business as colliery proprietors for that year, claimed to deduct £10,424 for exhausted capital:—Held: (1) by virtue of above sect. the mines were assessable under Schedule D. of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, & not under Schedule A.; (2) in estimating "the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains" of the business under Schedule D., Case I., r. 1, the deduction ought to be made, & it was not one of the deductions forbidden by Schedule D, Case I., r. 3, or by Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 159.—KNOWLES v. MCADAM (1877), 3 Ex. D. 23; 47 L. J. Q. B. 139; 37 L. T. 795; 26 W. R. 114; 1 Tax Cas. 161.

A tenant of minerals, though he may be under a constant vanishing expense in sinking new pits as the old ones become exhausted, is not entitled, in computing the profits for assessment of income tax, to deduct from the gross profits a sum estimated as representing the amount of capital expended in making bores & sinking pits, which have been exhausted by the year's working.

Can a mine owner write off & deduct from the gross earnings of his mine in a particular year, a sum to represent that year's depreciation of all the pits in the mines whenever sunk? I am clearly of opinion that this cannot be done. It may be proper for a trader, or for a trading co., to perform in his or their books an operation of this kind every year, in order to judge of the sum that can in that year be safely taken out of the trade & spent as trade profits. But I am clearly of opinion that the owner of a mine cannot quâ owner thus manipulate his accounts when the question is, under sect. 60 of the principle Act [Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35)] what is the "amount of profits received" from the mine in each of the five years upon which the average is to be taken? (LORD CAIRNS).

A pit sunk to approach the mineral underground is not unlike a road made above ground, from the pit's mouth to the highway, as means of transporting the mineral to the market. If a man were possessed of such a mine & such a road, it would be true that as the mineral was gradually worked out, the road & the capital sunk in making it, equally with the pit, & the capital involved in making it, would gradually be exhausted & lost; but the decaying character of the property would not make it the less subject to be taxed, according to its annual value or the profit obtained by using it, as long as the mineral lasted (LORD PENZANCE).

(2) I am not prepared to say that, under the words Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), a mine-owner might not in some cases be entitled to an allowance in respect to the cost of sinking a pit, by means of which pit the minerals are gotten which are the source of profit for the year in which the pit was sunk (LORD CAIRNS).

I do not wish to lay down any general proposition, either that money expended in sinking pits can never be in the nature of expenses incurred within the five years in working the coal so as to be properly taken into account in estimating the profits made in that period, or to say what, if any, the circumstances are under which it may be done (LORD BLACKBURN).

(3) The effect of Revenue Act, 1866 (c. 36), s. 8, is not to transfer mines for the purposes of income tax from Schedule A. of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, to Schedule D. but only to cause the duties to be assessed according to the provisions laid down as to secrecy, etc., in Schedule D. so far as not inconsistent with the rules of Schedule A.—*COLTNESS IRON CO. v. 14. Building society mortgage.]—A benefit building society lent money to borrowing members at a fixed rate of interest, & took from them a security on their property. The repayment of the loans was by weekly payments of a fixed sum, in respect of principal & interest, the proportion of interest to principal in each payment decreasing as time went on, & the principal remaining due decreased. No deduction was allowed to be made by the borrower in respect of income tax. The society were assessed to income tax under Schedule D. on the interest they received, as being interest of money within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2. On a case stated:—Held: the expression "interest of money" in the sect. is not restricted to annual interest, & the interest received by the society was not in respect of a loan on land, but of a contract relating to interest

15. Property yielding no profits—Capable of occupation—Public sewer—Contributions by other authorities.]—(1) A sewer was made, controlled by, & vested in a local authority in pursuance of statutory powers. It was rated to the poor rate. The local authority made no profit or gain out of it. The cost of making & maintaining it was paid for by a public loan repayable by annual instalments. The moneys for the repayment were found partly by contributions levied from neighbouring district councils whose sewage went through the sewer & partly from rates; & this was the only income. Upon an assessment to income tax as to a portion of the sewer:—Held: the local authority was chargeable to income tax in respect of the annual value of that portion of the sewer as a hereditament capable of actual occupation under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 60, Sched. A., No. I.

(2) Schedule A., No. III., applies to the properties therein specified when such properties are used as trading concerns for the purpose of earning profits, but when such properties are not used as trading concerns they are assessable under No. I. & not under No. III.

The water supply was confined to the limits of the city, no charge being made by the trustees for water supplied for public purposes & a nominal charge only for water supplied for domestic & trade purposes. Three-quarters of the expenses of the undertaking were met out of the endowment income of the trust & one-quarter only was obtained from the persons to whom water was supplied:—Held: the waterworks were not a concern chargeable under Schedule A., No. III., but were a hereditament chargeable under Schedule A., No. I.—SHAW v. 28. Rent of minerals—Lessee not in occupation—Assessment on lessor.]—Appltd. granted to a co. a lease for a term of years of all the coal & other minerals under land of which he was the owner at a "footage rent or royalty" to be computed yearly & at a "minimum yearly rent" of £60. The co. also owned the minerals under adjoining lands, which it intended to work together with the demised minerals as one colliery undertaking. The co. had bored for coal under the adjoining lands, but no borings or workings had taken place with regard to the demised coal; & the co. had not yet produced any coal or minerals. The co. paid the minimum yearly rent of £60 to the lessor, deducting income tax; but it did not pay over the amount of the tax to the Crown. No assessment had been made in respect of the demised coal. The lessor, having been assessed to income tax from the use of land was first assessable in 1907 & must be assessed as derived in that year. 47. Expense of constructing sea wall or embankment—Increasing value of land—Not protective merely.]—Applt. was assessed to the income tax under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 37, Sched. A., in respect of the annual value of certain lands. The lands had prior to 1880 been salt marshes adjoining a tidal river, which were liable to be flooded at every tide, & had a small yearly value as pasturage. Applt. began in 1880 to construct an embankment for the purpose of excluding the water from these lands, which was completed in 1885, & the lands were by the construction of such embankment, converted into valuable enclosed lands, of much greater value than in their previous state as salt marshes:—Held: applt. was not entitled to any deduction under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 37, on the ground that the embankment constructed by him was not "necessary for the preservation or protection of such lands against the encroachment or overflowing of the sea or any tidal river," within the sect., inasmuch as the sect. did not apply to embankments made for the improvement of the land by altering its condition, but only to embankments made for its protection or preservation in its existing state.—*HESKETH v. 48. Fines on renewal of leases — Temporarily deposited at bank — Not applied as productive capital.]—Money, which had been received by applt. for fines on the renewal of leases, had been placed at a bank, on deposit at interest, in the names of the trustees of a will, under which applt. was tenant for life. By the will fines on renewals of leases were to be invested in the purchase of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold property. The money was placed at the bank temporarily until required for permanent investment, & interest was received on it by applt., who paid income tax on such interest. Applt. claimed exemption from income tax on the money so placed on deposit, on the ground that such money had been applied as productive capital, on which a profit had arisen otherwise chargeable for the year in which the assessment was made, within the meaning of rule 5 in s. 60, Schedule (A), No. II., of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), so as to be exempt under the proviso contained in that rule:—Held: the money on which exemption was claimed, having been temporarily placed on deposit, had not been "applied as productive capital," within the meaning of the rule, & applt. was not entitled to exemption.—*MOSTYN (LORD) v. General rule — Construction of charitable purposes — Not restricted to relief from poverty.]—(1) In a case where an allowance which ought to be granted under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 61, Sched. A., No. VI., is refused, mandamus lies to the comrs. commanding them to grant the allowance & to give a certificate of the allowance with an order for the payment thereof.

(2) Lands in England were conveyed by deed in 1813 to trustees upon trust after payment of costs & outgoings to apply two-fourths of the rents & profits for the general purposes of maintaining, supporting & advancing the missionary establishments among heathen nations of the Protestant Episcopal Church, commonly known as the Moravian Church; & to apply the remaining two-fourths for purposes which were admitted in argument in this House on behalf of the Crown to be charitable within the Act. On a claim for the allowance in respect of the whole trust:—Held: the words "charitable purposes" in Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 61, Sched. A., No. VI., were not restricted to the meaning of relief from poverty, but must be construed according to the legal & technical meaning given to those words by English law & by legislation applicable to Scotland & the district served by the sewer should yield, in respect of the sewer rate, a return equal to 5 per cent. on the cost of the sewer, he would annually make up the deficiency.

The payments in question, being either capital expenditure for the development of the estate or a supplement to rates, were not annual payments within the meaning of Income Tax Acts, & accordingly were not subject to deduction of income tax.—*OSWALD v. The college claimed that the interest allowed by the bankers was not interest in respect of which the college was chargeable with income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case III., & that, alternatively, if the bank interest was assessable, the college was entitled to apply under Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (c. 8), s. 23, for an adjustment of the liability to income tax by reference to the loss on its working & to the aggregate amount of its income for the year of assessment. 57. ——— Self-supporting for one year.]—An institution for the reception of insane persons was founded by charitable contributions; it was partly & substantially supported by funds derived from charitable sources, having an endowment fund, & a small portion of its income being derived from subscription. It was vested in trustees & managed gratuitously by a committee. During the year previous to that for which the assessment was made the income derived from the payments made by patients & from the sale of produce on a farm belonging to the institution, without taking into account the income arising from the endowment fund & the annual subscriptions, exceeded the total expenditure:—Held: the institution was not wholly self-supporting merely because the income derived from the payments of patients & the sale of produce had in a particular year exceeded the expenditure, but was a hospital maintained in part by charity, & was therefore exempt from landlord's property tax & inhabited house duty, as being a "hospital" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 61, r. 6, & House Tax Act, 1808 (c. 55), Sched. 59. Public school—Necessity for charitable foundation.]—Ackworth School was established in 1779 by subscriptions collected from members of the Society of Friends, for the education of children who were members of the society in Great Britain whose parents were not in affluence. The rules of the school provided that when the school was not full there should be eligible for admission at the discretion of the controlling committee, children from beyond the limits of Great Britain being members of the society, failing whom, children closely connected with the society, or failing whom, children not in the membership of the society. The object of the school was to train up the children in the principles & practices of the Christian religion as professed by the Society of Friends, & to impart to them a sound English education. The school was supported by substantial fees paid by the parents of the children, by the income arising from its invested property, by annual subscriptions & other donations & legacies, & was under the direction of a general meeting appointed by the society. To assist those members of the society who were unable to provide the whole of the fees, bursaries were granted in some cases. Bursaries were restricted to members of the society, excepting that the committee might grant certain bursaries to children closely connected with the society. The religious views of the society were taught, but no effort was made to bring into the society the children of parents who were not members of the society. At the end of 1910 the school was full on both sides, there being one hundred & eighty-one boys, & one hundred & twenty-two girls, three hundred & three in all. £12,000 out of rather less than £14,000, the income received by the school during 1910, was derived from fees. The school was recognised as an efficient secondary school by the Board of Education, but never received any grants therefrom:—Held: the school was not a "public school" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 61, Sched. A., No. VI., & as such exempt from payment of income tax; & it was not a "charity school" within Case IV. of the exemptions to Schedule B. of House Tax Act, 1808 (c. 55).

Although, for a school to be a "public school," there must be an element of public foundation & charitable foundation among its resources, it need not be purely an eleemosynary institution. It is to be in the same rank as a college or hall. I certainly think that enough of the resources of this school are derived from endowment to satisfy that requirement, but that does not decide the question I have to determine. I do not think this school is a public school, having regard to its nature & management. It seems to me that the persons who founded this school wished to avoid an overwhelming public element in its constitution. They wanted a school which they could keep under their own control, in which they could teach the religious views held by members of the Society of Friends & exercise a supervision over the admission of pupils (ROWLATT, J.).—*ACKWORTH SCHOOL v. The inmates were to be ladies of fifty years old or upwards, possessed or in the actual enjoyment of a fixed yearly income of not less than £25 & not more than £55. Each inmate was entitled to the use of the common room, & to the exclusive use of an unfurnished bedroom & sitting-room, & to be supplied with coals, gas, & attendance free of cost; the inmates provided their own furniture, food, clothing, washing, & medical attendance; the food was cooked & served by the staff. The income of the endowment fund was applied to the payment of salaries, servants, wages & board, repairs, upkeep of fabric & of household & cooking utensils, & in providing gas & coals for the inmates & staff. There were no subscriptions to the home from the public:

64. Buildings partly occupied by master & officers—Under charitable scheme—Salaries over £150.]—The governors of Sutton's Hospital in Charterhouse, a public charity established by charter in 1611 & now administered under schemes approved by the Charity Comrs., are the owners & occupiers of certain premises, known as the Charterhouse, in respect of which for the years ended Apr. 5, 1917, 1918, & 1919, they had been assessed to income tax under Schedule A., in the gross sum of £2,896 less the statutory deduction of £482 14s. for repairs, & an allowance of £2,055 1s. under No. VI. of Schedule A. The balance, viz. £358 5s., charged with tax under the said assessments represented the annual value of the premises occupied rent free by the master, registrar, preacher, medical officer & manciple, each of whom was an officer of the hospital with an income exceeding £150 per annum. The governors contended that, inasmuch as these officials inhabited the said apartments in compliance with the schemes under which the charity was administered & as part of their respective duties, they did not "occupy" their respective residences within Schedule A., No. VI. & No. IX.; that, as the assessment in respect of the premises as a whole had been made upon the governors, it was inconsistent to claim that the premises assigned to those officials were so occupied; & that the premises as a whole were exempt as a hospital or almshouse under No. VI. of Schedule A. Alternatively they contended that, if the premises were so occupied by the said officers, the assessment on the governors was void & should be discharged:—Held: the governors were the occupiers of the premises as a whole within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 63, Sched. A., No. IX., r. 2, & the apartments occupied by the officials were not within the exemption granted to the hospital by No. VI. of Schedule A.—SUTTON'S HOSPITAL IN CHARTERHOUSE (GOVERNORS) v. —The justices of a county in the due exercise of statutory powers erected assize cts. with the usual rooms & offices, & a county police station with the usual offices & accommodation for constables living there, & for prisoners. The land on which they were built was conveyed under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92, to the clerk of the peace to hold to him & his successors for ever upon trust for the construction of a police station, & otherwise for such uses as the county justices should from time to time order. The buildings formed one block, & were used for the administration of justice & for police purposes. Parts of the buildings were also used for holding county & committee meetings, & various other occasional purposes, but no rent or profit was received or made in respect of the buildings or any part of them:—*Held: income tax was not payable in respect of the buildings under Schedules A. & B. of Income Tax Acts, 1842 (c. 35), 1853 (c. 34).—COOMBER v. Occupier—Superintendent of police—House within boundary of police station.]—Applt., a superintendent of police, lived with his family in a house within the boundary of a police station which included other buildings used for the purposes of the police district. There was a yard to the house, & a wall which divided applt.'s premises from the remainder of the police station, to which a door in the wall afforded access. The front entrance of the house faced the street. Applt. kept the keys of the house, which he had himself furnished, & for the use of which a deduction was made from his salary. He was compelled to live in the house, as that was necessary for the discharge of his official duties; the house was liable to be used for such purposes connected with the police force as the chief constable might direct; & applt. was liable to be removed from station to station at any time:—*Held: applt. had not such an occupation of the house as to render him liable to pay income tax or inhabited house duty in respect of it.—BENT v. 73. Arrears accrued before occupation—While premises unoccupied.]—On Apr. 22, 1897, a lease was granted to pltf. of premises, beginning Dec. 25, 1896, for sixty years at £65 a year rent. The rent was to be paid quarterly, the first payment being payable on Sept. 29, 1897. He did not take possession, until Apr. 1897, & for several years before he entered, the premises had been unoccupied. An assessment for income tax of £9 3s. 4d. was made for the year Apr. 1896 to Apr. 1897. In Aug. & again in Sept. 1897 demands were made for payment, & as pltf. refused to pay, on Nov. 17 a distraint was put in. The present action was then commenced against deft., a duly appointed collector for the purpose of the Income falls. The sewage works were not a source of profit:—Held: works for the disposal or treatment of sewage are not within the definition of "sewer" in Finance Act, 1921, s. 34 (2) & that the exemption granted to the local authority by that sect. in respect of sewers maintained by it did not extend to sewage purification works.—SUMMERS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 74. — Land farmed for part of year.]—Resps. who were wholesale potato merchants & potato salesmen carrying on business in London, owned land on which they grew potatoes, & also hired land under ordinary tenancy agreements for the same purposes. They also grew potatoes on land in Lincolnshire which they hired from neighbouring farmers under special agreements, the land so hired being changed each season. Under those special agreements, by which the land was purported to be let to resps., resps. had possession of the land until the potatoes were fully ripe, which in some cases was more than a year from the date of the agreement & in others was less than a year. The landlord under the agreement had to plough the land, do all the carting & provide all the horse labour that was necessary. Resps. supplied all the seed, artificial manure, & the manual labour necessary to drill the manure, plant the seed, take up & pit the potatoes & afterwards prepare them for market. The landlord was paid £3 per acre as rent for the land, & £15 per acre for supplying all horse labour, etc., which sum also included all rates & taxes. The landlord, was & the resps. were not, assessed to income tax under Schedule B. in respect of those lands. Resps. sold the potatoes, which they had grown in the course of their business as potato salesmen. They were assessed in London to income tax under Schedule D. on the profits of their business as potato merchants & salesmen, & the profits they made from the sale of potatoes grown on the lands under those special agreements were included in that assessment:—Held: (1) resps. had the use of the lands on which they grew potatoes under the special agreements in a full sense of the term, with full power to maintain their rights, & must therefore be deemed to be occupiers within Rules applicable to Schedule A., No. VII., r. 2; (2) the fact that the “landlord” had been assessed & charged to income tax under Schedule B. in respect of the occupation of the lands did not conclude the matter against resps., as there might under Schedule B. be two persons who were chargeable as occupiers in respect of the same lands; (3) resps. were assessable in respect of the profits arising from the occupation of the lands in question under Schedule B. & not under Schedule D.

Where there is a separate & distinct operation unconnected with the occupation of the land, such as a cheese factory dealing with the milk of a dairy farm, or a butcher's shop dealing with the beasts of a cattle farm, there may be a separate assessment of that operation; but the fact that the farmer sells his produce either on the farm or at a local market, or at Mark Lane, or even that he sells it in a shop, does not justify an assessment under Schedule D. as well as or in substitution for Schedule B.—BACK v. DANIELS, [1925] 1 K. B. 526; 94 L. J. K. B. 304; 132 L. T. 455; 41 T. L. R. 162; 69 Sol. Jo. 160; 9 Tax Cas. 183, C. A.

78. “Occupier” — A question of fact.]—

Applt., who had been assessed to income tax under Schedule B. for the year ended Apr. 5, 1921, as the occupier of a certain farm, appealed against the assessment on the ground that he was not the sole occupier of the farm, but occupied it jointly with his three sons & daughter, & that the assessment should have been made in their joint names. On appeal before the general comrs. applt. stated that, prior to the tenancy of the present farm, he had occupied another farm in partnership with two of his sons, & that those sons were named in the agreement relating to that tenancy (the agreement was not produced in evidence); stated that he alone was the rated occupier of the present farm; produced the agreement of tenancy of the present farm, which had been entered into between the landlord & applt. alone, & stated that the sons were not mentioned therein owing to their absence on military service;

The general conclusion of opinion that no partnership in fact existed during the year of assessment; that the terms of the deed dated Dec. 1920, were inconsistent with the existence of an actual partnership; & that applt. was the sole occupier of the farm & that the assessment had been correctly made in his name; & they accordingly confirmed the assessment:—Held: the determination of the comrs. was a conclusion of fact, & as there was evidence upon which they could properly reach that conclusion, the ct. was not entitled to review that determination.—*HAWKER v. B., has been reduced by the comrs., on appeal by the occupier of the land, to such an extent that the tithe rentcharge exceeds two thirds of the annual value of the land, as ascertained by the assessment, in consequence of which so much of the tithe rentcharge as is equal to the excess is liable to be remitted under sub-sect. 1. —*R. v. Act, 1887 (c. 15), s. 18, to be assessed for & income tax purposes under Schedule D. of Schedule B. He subsequently applied Tithe Act, 1891 (c. 8), s. 8 (5), for a certificate of the district comrs. of taxes of the annual value of his land. The comrs. declined to give certificate unless applt. first consented to his land assessed for the purposes of Schedule under sub-sect. 4 of the last-mentioned Act

83. Claim to relief — As joint tenants Limited to partners.]—A farm was let to a father & his four sons as joint tenants. The father was assessed to income tax under Schedule B. in respect of the farm as the occupier, & the deductions & reliefs to which he was personally entitled were duly allowed against the assessment. The tax under the assessment was paid by the father & the four sons by five several & equal payments. The father appealed against the assessment on the ground that there was a partnership between himself & his four sons & that the five of them should be assessed as joint occupiers, but the General Comrs. dismissed the appeal. One of the sons then contended that, notwithstanding that there might be no partnership, he was as a joint tenant of the farm entitled to treat one-fifth share of the Schedule B. assessment as his income & to claim relief in respect of his personal allowance by way of repayment of the tax paid on that share. The General Comrs. decided that the matter was concluded by their decision on the father's appeal, & that the son had no title to payment:—Held: although the son was a joint tenant of the property, he was not entitled under 1918 Act, s. 20, to any repayment in respect of the tax paid thereon under Schedule B., inasmuch as he was not a partner in joint occupation of the land.—*McKIE v. 87. Annual value of house—Occupied by virtue of employment.]—Applt. was agent at M. for the Bank of Scotland & had an income in money, from all sources, of £374. He occupied rent free a house forming part of the bank buildings, which was of annual value of £50. It was part of his duty as agent to occupy the house, & he could not let it, or vacate it even for a time, without the consent of the directors. Upon ceasing to hold the appointment of the agent he would have been obliged to give up the house at once. The house was suitable for a residence, & if it had not been provided he would have required another house of the same value. He claimed an abatement of income tax under Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1876 (c. 16), s. 8, on the ground that his income from all sources was under £400:—Held: the annual value of the house was not “profits & gains” within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D., nor “perquisites, profits, or emoluments” within Sched. E. & could not be reckoned as part of his income, & he was entitled to the abatement claimed.

88. Profits made by trustee for creditors—Though applicable in payment of creditors.]—By an indenture of sub-lease a firm of worsted spinners demised a part of their business premises together with steam power to be generated by them. They subsequently executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of their creditors empowering the trustee, with the consent of the committee of inspection, to carry on the business. The trustee continued to occupy the portion of the premises which the debtors had occupied for the purpose of winding up their business & continued to supply motive power to the sub-lessee in accordance with the sub-lease & a fresh sub-lease afterwards granted & the amount received by the trustee in respect of the power exceeded the cost of supplying it:—Held: the difference between the cost of supplying the power & the payment received for it, was a profit assessable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, sched. 90. Green fees taken by golf club—From non-members.]—(1) Appls., an ordinary members' golf club, acquired land under a lease from a railway co. & laid out a golf course & erected a club house thereon. In addition to the members of the club, who were entitled on payment of an annual subscription to play on the links & to other privileges for the current year, a considerable number of visitors were permitted to use the club premises & to play on the links in accordance with a provision contained in the lease which required the club to allow such visitors to play on payment of certain green fees. The total annual expenditure incurred by the club in maintaining the links in a proper condition for play exceeded the total amount of fees received from visitors:—Held: appls. were carrying on an enterprise which was beyond the scope of the ordinary functions of the club, & as to which separate accounts might be kept so as to ascertain whether there were any profits, & any profits derived from the visitors' green fees were therefore taxable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D.

The adventure of maintaining golf links & charging for the use of them is an “adventure or concern in the nature of trade.” If other conditions therefore are satisfied, the club are, I think, proper procedure was to distribute the entire balance without deduction in respect of income tax, leaving it to the Comrs. of Inland Revenue to recover the tax, if any, payable by the persons entitled to the fund.—COX v. MURRAY, [1919] 1 I. R. 358.—IR.

assessable under the first rule of Schedule D. But, as I have already said, it is, I think, unnecessary to determine whether that is so or not, for if it were not a "concern in the nature of trade" yet other things being satisfied the club would be assessable under the sixth rule (BUCKLEY, L.J.)

The . . . club is not in a position to assert that its receipts from visitors, not being members of the club, cannot constitute annual "profits & gains" in respect of which income tax is assessable (KENNEDY, L.J.).

(2) The comrs. for the general purposes of the income tax had decided that the club was liable to assessment in respect of visitors' green fees, less such proportion of the annual outlay in maintaining & keeping up the links & club-house as the visitors' contributions bore to the entire annual income of the club or fund available for the maintenance & upkeep:—Held: the method of arriving at the amount of the taxable profits adopted by the comrs. was wrong, & in default of agreement the case must go back to them to ascertain the amount of taxable income received by the club.—CARLISLE & SILLOTH GOLF CLUB v. Trade association—Providing accommodation for members & subscribing non-members—Profits made from members.]—A trade assocn. which provided a market, newsroom, & other facilities for its members, & for non-members who were subscribers, was held to be carrying on a business & to be liable to assessment under Schedule D., Case I., on the profits of what its members paid to it.—LIVERPOOL CORN TRADE ASSOCN., LTD. v. MONKS (1926), 42 T. L. R. 393.

92. Profit on speculation—Isolated transaction—Whether in operation of company's business.]—A co. carrying on business as coal merchants, ship & insurance brokers, & as sole selling agent for various colliery cos., in which latter capacity it is part of its duty to purchase wagons on behalf of its clients, makes a purchase of wagons on its own account as a speculation & subsequently disposes of them at a profit. It was contended that, this transaction being an isolated one, the profit was in the nature of a capital profit on the sale of an investment & should be excluded in computing the liability of the co. to income tax:—Held: the profit realised on this transaction was made in the operation of the co.'s business & was properly included in the computation of the co.'s profits for assessment under Schedule D.—BEYNON & Co., LTD. v. OGG (1918), 7 Tax Cas. 125.

93. ———.]—A co., which was incorporated on Feb. 24, 1917, with a capital of £30,000, purchased certain patents under an agreement, dated Mar. 6, 1917, & was assessed to income tax in respect of sums received by way of purchase price under various agreements by which the co. had sold the rights of working the patent to companies in America, France & Japan. The objects for which the co. in its memorandum of assocn. was stated to be formed did not include the carrying on the business of the buying & selling of patents & patent rights. The co. appealed against the assessments on the ground that the patents acquired were capital assets & that the result of the sale of the patents was to replace one set of capital assets by other capital assets, & that the sums received in respect of the sale of the patents were realisations of capital & were not profits or gains of its trade or business. The Crown contended that the co. had carried on the trade of acquiring, disposing of, & otherwise turning to account inventions, patents, & the like under the powers contained in its memorandum of assocn. & that the sums received for the patents were consequently profits or gains of the co.'s trade or business:—Held:—there was ample evidence for the findings of the comrs., which amounted in fact to a conclusion that the trade or business in question was not carried on but that the co. was formed to acquire these patents as its one capital asset.—COLLINS v. C. co. having been assessed for income tax under Schedule D. on profit arising from the transaction, C. co. appealed contending that the co. had had no income & that the sale was truly a transaction by which the co. substituted for its capital in the form of land a capital in the form of shares:—Held: having regard to the various branches of business for which C. co. was formed the transaction was a sale in the line of the co.'s business, resulting in a profit liable to income tax under Schedule D., & not a mere change in the mode of investment of C. co.'s capital.—CALIFORNIAN COPPER SYNDICATE, LTD. & REDUCED v. m. ——— Outside ordinary course of business.]—A merchant & shipowner undertook as a venture outside the ordinary course of his business certain salvage operations which resulted in a profit:—Held: this profit constituted not receipts or accruals of a capital nature, but revenue derived from capital productively employed, & therefore, income liable to normal tax & super tax.—STEPHAN v. Resps. duly received their proportion of this dividend in cash & shares, & in July, 1915, sold the shares for £1,086 19s. 9d., that amount being credited in their books to capital account. Having been assessed to income tax in respect of the amount realised by the shares, resps. appealed to the general comrs. who discharged the assessment, holding that the distribution of the assets in question was a distribution by the Union Pacific Co. of capital & not income:—Held: the distribution was not of capital but of profits or gains, & consequently the sum in question was liable to income tax.—POOL v. GUARDIAN INVESTMENT TRUST CO., [1922] 1 K. Annual payment in respect of patents—Distinguished from purchase-money payable by instalments.]—Applt. co. had been incorporated under the name of L. & co. under which name it had acquired certain patents & knowledge of certain secret processes. In Nov. 1916, L. & co. entered into an agreement with an American co. by which each co. undertook to communicate to the other all such information as they then possessed or controlled in connection with the manufacture of dyes & certain other products. The agreement provided that L. & co. should have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, & sale under its own & the American co.'s patented inventions & secret processes throughout Great Britain, Ireland, India, & certain countries in Europe, & in all British possessions except Canada, & non-exclusive rights in Canada & all countries except those for which the American co. was to have exclusive rights; while the American co. was to have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, & sale under its own & L. & co.'s patented inventions & secret processes throughout America & non-exclusive rights throughout all other countries except those for which L. & co. were to have exclusive rights. It was a term of this agreement that the American co. should pay, subject to certain conditions, to L. & co. £25,000 in each of the ten years from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1927.

In arriving at the profits of applt. co. for excess profits duty purposes, the several sums of £25,000 falling due in the periods covered by the assessments, were included. Applt. co. contended before the Special Comrs. that on the true construction of the agreement the transaction was a sale by the co. to the American co. of one of its principal capital assets, viz. its special knowledge of secret processes & the right to use these processes & applt. co.'s patents in the territory allotted to the American co. for the sum of £250,000 payable by annual instalments; & that the sums received were the purchase price of a capital asset of applt. co., & not a trading receipt. The Special Comrs. held that the payments were income or business receipts, & were properly included in the assessments. Power was taken in the memorandum of Assocn. to sell the property & such a sale was contemplated in the prospectus of the co. The original capital being insufficient to develop the estates purchased, the whole of the undertaking was sold to a second co. for a consideration in excess of the capital expended:—Held: the profit on the sale was not a profit assessable to income tax, but was an appreciation of capital.—TEBRAU (JOHORE) RUBBER SYNDICATE, LTD. v. FARMER (SURREY OF TAXES) (1910), 5 Tax Cas. 1.—SCOT.

& plant, as a going concern. The comr. of taxation made an apportionment of the purchase-money in respect of the live stock, & assessed the vendor on that amount as income derived from carrying on a business:—Held: as the transaction was not in the course of carrying on the business or for the purpose of carrying on the business, but was for the purpose of putting an end to the business, neither the purchase money, nor any part of it was taxable.—TAXATION COMR. a firm of ship managers, were employed in that capacity by a certain steamship co., their remuneration consisting in part of a percentage of the co.'s annual net profits, including interest on its investments, which were considerable.

The co. went into voluntary liquidation in 1918, & in general meeting authorised the liquidator to distribute some £800,000 worth of its investments among the shareholders, & to transfer £50,000 of 5 per cent. National War Bonds to resps. "as compensation for loss of office," the arts of assocn. having been specifically amended to enable this to be done. The said bonds were duly transferred to resps. in Oct. 1918. Subsequently, in pursuance of arrangements already made, the undertaking of the old co., including two ships & its remaining assets, was transferred to a new co. of the same name consisting of the same shareholders. The arts of assocn. of the new co. provided that its first managers should be resp. firm, though there had been no bargain to that effect, & that their remuneration should be on similar lines to that formerly received by them from the old co. In computing resp. firm's liability to income tax & excess profits duty, the said sum of £50,000 was treated as part of the profits arising from their business as ship managers, but, on appeal to the General Comrs., they contended (inter alia) that the sum in question was a voluntary payment made to them as compensation for the loss of the profits of their employment under the old co. which had terminated, & that it was not chargeable to income tax or excess profits duty. The General Comrs. decided that it was not a profit liable to income tax or excess profits duty:—Held: on the findings of the Comrs. as to the nature of the payment, which there was evidence to support, the said sum of £50,000 was not a profit liable to income tax or excess profits duty.—CHIBBETT v. Local coal dues—Surplus income appropriated by statute—To public purposes.]—Under a local Act, improvement comrs. for the town of Brighton were empowered to levy a duty of 6d. upon every chaldron of coal, culm, etc., landed on the beach, or brought into, & consumed within, the town, for the purpose of erecting & maintaining groynes & other works against the encroachments of the sea. By a subsequent Act the duty was continued & increased; & subsequently, by Brighton Town Improvement Act, it was, together with market tolls, & other rates, duties, & assessments, which the said comrs. were empowered to levy, consolidated into a common fund for the general purposes of the Act, which included, in addition to the maintenance of the groynes, etc., the paving, lighting, watching, cleaning, & otherwise improving the town. By Brighton Comrs. Transfer Act, 1855 the said comrs. ceased to act as such, & the corpn. & their successors were appointed comrs. in their stead:—Held: the coal duty was a property in respect of which the corpn., who had succeeded to the rights of the comrs., were liable & bound to pay income tax, either as a "hereditament" under schedule A., or as "property or profits" under sched. D. of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 33).

105. Fees of burial board—Surplus income applied in aid of poor rate.]—A burial board was constituted under Burial Act, 1852 (c. 85), & in pursuance of the Act a burial ground was provided with money charged upon the poor rate of the parish, & the surplus over expenditure of the income derived from the fees charged by the board was regularly applied in aid of the poor rate:—Held: the board were liable to be assessed to the income tax in respect of such surplus, inasmuch as the provision requiring it to be applied in aid of the poor rate did not prevent it from being a "profit" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35).—PADDINGTON BURIAL BOARD v. PART V. SECT. 1, SUB SECT. 2.

1071. Rural district council supplying water.]—A rural district council is bound by Act of Parliament to supply water to any ratepayers within its rural district who may make application therefor, & is empowered to collect a special rate from consumers of water so supplied:—Held: the profit made by the district council is a profit within Income Tax Acts, & as such is liable to tax.—MULLINGAR RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. ROWLES (1912), 6 Tax Cas. 85.—IR.

l. Supply of water—Beyond area of compulsory supply—Surplus revenue.]—A city corp. was empowered by its Waterworks Act to supply water beyond the city boundaries. Any income thus arising was to be paid into a consolidated fund available for all the purposes of the Act:—Held: the excess of receipts over expenditure in respect of the extra-municipal supply constituted profit chargeable with income tax.—DUBLIN CORPN. v. M'ADAM (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) (1887), 2 Tax Cas. 387.—IR.

m. ———.]—A municipal corp. was empowered by its Water Acts to supply water beyond the municipal boundaries, & to sell water by contract for trade & other purposes within the area of compulsory supply:—Held: the surplus revenue derived from these sources constituted profit assessable to income tax.—GLASGOW WATER COMRS. v. MILLER (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) (1886), 2 Tax Cas. 131.—SCOT.

n. ———.]—The produce a rate or tax for a public purpose is not, in the hands of the local authority by which it is levied, to be by them administered for the benefit of the ratepayer within their administrative area, in the nature of "profits" for the purposes of the income tax. But where a local authority sells water to authorities outside its own area, the produce or surplus arising from such sale is "profit" for the purposes of the tax. The corporation of I., owning waterworks, entered, pursuant to statutory authority, into agreements with two authorities outside their area for the supply of water to those authorities at a price based on gross rental. The local authorities raised the sums to pay the fixed price by a compulsory rate. The sums so received by the corporation of I. were in part applied to a sinking fund:—Held: (1) the surplus of receipts from the local authorities were profits earned by the corporation assessable to income tax; (2) the part applied to the sinking fund was also assessable to the tax.—HARRIS v. IRVINE CORPN. (1900), 65 J. P. 663.—SCOT.

o. ———.]—Money appropriated to sinking fund—Surplus carried forward for reduction of rate.]—The G. Corp. Water Comrs. were empowered to levy rates to be applied in defraying the current expenses of the water supply & in keeping up the undertaking; in payment of annuities & of interest on borrowed moneys; in providing a sinking fund; & any surplus was to be carried to the next year's account & applied in the reduction of the domestic water rate:—Held: neither the money appropriated to the sinking fund nor the surplus carried forward for the reduction of next year's rate was assessable profit.—Re GLASGOW CORPN. WATERWORKS (1875), 1 Tax Cas. 28.—SCOT.

q. Supply of gas—Surplus income—Including sum set apart for sinking fund.]—The G. Corp. Gas Comrs. were empowered to supply gas to the city & its suburbs. The receipts are to be applied in payment of incidental expenses; in payment of expenses of management & maintenance; in payment of annuities & interest on borrowed moneys; in providing a sinking fund & carrying out extensions; & any surplus might be carried to the credit of the corp. for general purposes:—Held: the surplus, including the sum set apart for sinking fund, was assessable profit.—Re GLASGOW GAS COMRS. (1876), 1 Tax Cas. 122.—SCOT.

r. Profits forming part of the common good of the burgh.]—A corp. received annual profits forming part of the common good of the burgh. The corp. contended before the comrs. that these profits did not form a subject for taxation, being applicable to the public purposes of the burgh; & if they were assessable, that the whole expenditure incurred in connection with the common good should be deducted:—Held: the assessment must be upheld.—WEBBER v. GLASGOW CORPN. (1893), 3 Tax Cas. 202.—SCOT.

t. Interest on county fund of county council.]—The county fund of a county council was banked in the name of the county treasurer, who was appointed by the council. Interest was allowed on any money from time to time lying to the credit of the fund:—Held: the interest was chargeable with income tax & the council was liable to assessment in respect of it.—MATTHEWS (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) v. CORK COUNTY COUNCIL (1910), 5 Tax Cas. 545.—IR.

112. Fishery board—Income from licences exceeding cost of administration.]—A fishery board acting under the provisions of Salmon & Freshwater Fisheries Acts, 1861 to 1892, does not carry on a business analogous to a trade, & any balance of the moneys received by it for fishing licences or for penalties recovered from offenders over & above the expenses of maintaining the fishery does not constitute a profit which is assessable to income tax.

The general sweeping up words in Case VI. of Schedule D., wide as they are, must not be treated as including every kind of income from whatever source derived, but must be read as limited to profits analogous to the other taxed forms of income (ROWLATT, J.).—SEVERN FISHERY BOARD v. O'MAY, [1919] 2 K. B. 484; 89 L. J. K. B. 9; 121 L. T. 371; 7 Tax Cas. 194.

113. Speculation—Contracts for future delivery of cotton.]—A person who speculates in contracts for future delivery of cotton is liable to income tax, Schedule D., Case VI.

It appears that he did engage in trade in the sense in which that is to be understood, & therefore these profits fall to be assessed under Case I. of Schedule D. (POLLOCK, M.R.).—COOPER v. STUBBS, [1925] 2 K. B. 753; 94 L. J. K. B. 903; 133 L. T. 582; 41 T. L. R. 614; 69 Sol. Jo. 743, C. A.

114. — Retail of wholesale purchase — Commodity outside usual business.]—Appl., who was an agricultural machinery merchant, bought a gigantic consignment of linen & set to work to make people buy it, & he succeeded in selling it within a year by organising a vast activity for that purpose. He was assessed to income tax under Schedule D. on his profits on the sale of the linen, & on appeal to the Special Comrs. he contended that he did not carry on any trade in connection with linen, that the transaction was a gamble, & that the profit was not an annual profit chargeable to income tax. The Special Comrs. held that in exercising these activities applt. was for the time being carrying on a trade the profits of which were chargeable to income tax:—Held: there was evidence on which the Special Comrs. could find the transaction to be in the nature of a trade, & that the fact of the profits being the income of a trade & belonging to the year of assessment was enough to make the profits "annual" within Schedule D., Case VI., & the decision of the Special Comrs. must be affirmed.—MARTIN v. LOWRY, MARTIN v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1925), 42 T. L. R. 233, C. A.

He was assessed to income tax under Schedule D. in respect of his betting transactions, & the General Comrs., on appeal, confirmed the assessment:—Held: his winnings from betting were not profits or gains assessable to income tax, Schedule D., either under Case I. or Case II. as from a trade or vocation, or under Case VI.—GRAHAM v. GREEN, [1925] 2 K. B. 37; 94 L. J. K. B. 494; 133 L. T. 367; 41 T. L. R. 371; 69 Sol. Jo. 478; 9 Tax Cas. 309.

B. He kept a stallion not merely for the service of his own stock on the farm, but for that of mares of other owners at their own farms. In respect of the fees so received the tenant was assessed to income tax under Schedule D.:—Held: whether the stallion was kept for the purpose of the farm or for the sake of getting fees for his services from the owners of mares in the neighbourhood, was a question of fact. The comrs. found that the use of the stallion was a use that provided a profit or gain to applt. which did not arise from the occupation of this land, & he had rightly been assessed under Schedule D.—MALCOLM v. LOCKHART, [1919] A. C. 463; 88 L. J. P. C. 46; 120 L. T. 449; 35 T. L. R. 231; 63 Sol. Jo. 264; 7 Tax Cas. 99, H. L.

a. Company—Single transaction.]—Resp. co. was formed in May, 1902, for the purpose of acquiring 525 acres of the M. Estate. Its memorandum of assocn. empowered it to do so, & to acquire other land, to manage & turn to account the lands acquired as might seem expedient, & to sell any lands the North West of Canada being granted to it by the Crown with important trading rights. From time to time they sold portions of land which they had acquired as part of the consideration for the surrender of their charter to the Crown on the foundation of the Dominion of Canada; & they distributed the proceeds as dividends among their shareholders. In the year 1903 part of the proceeds of land so sold was used for the purpose of reducing capital. The amount of the balance of the land account for this year was £177,857, & in respect of this sum the question arose whether deft. co. were liable to bring the same into account for the purpose of assessment to income tax:—Held: (1) the sum in question could not be regarded as profits or gains derived by deft. co. from carrying on a trade or business; (2) they were not carrying on the trade of selling land, but were doing no more than a private landowner did who was minded to sell from time to time as opportunity offered portions of his property, & therefore the sum in question was not liable to income tax.—*STEVENS v. 121. Sale of land in developing estate Company formed to realise for original owners.]—Resp. co. was incorporated in 1904 with the primary object of acquiring, managing & developing with a view to ultimate sale, certain lands in British Columbia which were held in trust for various persons who were interested therein either as owners, joint owners or as trustees. Subject to an extraordinary resolution, the co. had power to deal in other lands, but it had not at any time exercised that power. The share capital of the co. was fixed at a nominal amount, solely to facilitate division among the beneficiaries, & was not determined by reference to the value of the lands acquired. All the ordinary shares had been allotted in consideration of the conveyance of the lands to the co., & these shares had been continuously held by the original allottees, or their representatives. Working capital had been provided by the issue to ordinary shareholders of preference shares for cash. In 1908 the co. created & allotted to persons other than the ordinary shareholders deferred shares in return for services which enhanced the value of the lands:—Held: the surplus arising from the sale by the co. of portions of the lands was not the profits of a trade or business, & the function of the co. was merely to realise the capital value of the respective interests in the land under the trust.—RAND v. ALBERNI LAND CO., LTD. (1920), 7 Tax Cas. 629.

122. ——— No appropriation to capital or income.]—Resp. co. was incorporated in England in 1892 under the Co.'s Acts for the objects (inter alia) to acquire & purchase certain concessions in German South West Africa & to acquire, hold, prospect, develop, utilise, work & turn to account all or any of the properties comprised in the concessions. Assessments to income tax made upon resp. co. for the year to Apr. 5, 1916, & Apr. 5, 1917, included sums realised as profit on the sale by resp. co. of certain of the lands it had acquired under the concessions. The comrs. found that the acquisition of the lands by resp. co. was part of a broad & multiform scheme for the development of the territory & that the gradual sale of the land was contemplated from the first as part of the scheme of business of resp. co. They considered themselves bound, however, by the decision of the Ct. of Appeal in Stevens v. Hudson's Bay Co., No. 120, ante, to hold that the profits of resp. co. from the sales of land were not assessable to income tax as profits or gains derived by it from carrying on its trade or business & they reduced the assessments accordingly. The Crown appealed:—Held: as resp. co.'s objects included the turning to account of the land as one of the objects of an adventure with a view to profit, the case was distinguishable from Stevens v. Hudson's Bay Co., No. 120, ante, & the profits from the sale of lands could not be excluded from assessment as profits & gains of the co.'s trade.—*THEW v. acquired as the directors might think fit. Immediately the co. was formed it purchased the 525 acres for £26,250, & in the same month sold 4 acres to N. & Co. for £1,000. In Oct. following resp. co. sold the balance of the land, 521 acres, for £78,225, of which sum £15,645 was paid before Mar. 31, 1904; & it was on the profit on the balance of the purchase money, which fell due between that date & Mar. 31, 1905, that applt. claimed income tax. The co., after it had existed only six months, went into voluntary liquidation:—Held: resp. co. had been formed for the purpose of dealing in land; the co. had been on the business of dealing in land, & therefore the profit made on such dealing was income derived from business.—*TAXES COMR. v. c. ——— Houses erected burdened with feu duties—Duties sold—Land & houses retained.]—A co., whose business consisted in buying & selling land & rights in land, bought a piece of vacant ground for £898, & after erecting houses upon it burdened each house with a feu duty, the duties in all amounting to £114 per annum. The co. then sold the feu duties for £3,135 but retained the land & houses. The Inland Revenue claimed income tax on the difference between £898 & £3,135, as profit earned by the co.:—Held: the claim could not be sustained, inasmuch as the price of £3,135 could not have been obtained if the ground had remained vacant, but was partly due to the erection of houses by the co.—

The co. had placed the whole amount received by it on the sales against the cost of the land, & had not yet recovered sufficient to pay off the capital invested:—Held: the co. was not liable to be assessed for income tax for the current year upon the amount of the deferred payments, as such unpaid portions of the purchase price were not gains or profits derived or received within the current year.—*AFRICAN REALTY TRUST, LTD. v. The town in which the show is held varies from year to year, & is chosen solely with a view to agricultural interests, & without regard to profit-making possibilities. A separate account is kept of the receipts & expenditure in connection with each year's show, the chief items of receipt being fees for exhibits & for entries for prizes, & payments by the public for admission to the show. Any surplus arising out of the show is applied to the general purposes of the society, which has been admitted to be a "charity" within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts:—Held: the society was assessable to Income Tax under Schedule D., Case I. in respect of the profits of the annual show as carrying on a concern in the nature of trade.—ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND v. 127. Public school—Profits from fees—Applied for educational purposes.]—In 1873 Brighton College, which was founded in 1846 as a public school, was taken over by a co. incorporated under Cos. Acts as a co. limited by guarantee, the principal object of the co. being to provide thereby a general education in conformity with the doctrines of the Church of England—an object admittedly charitable. The surplus income, after providing for the annual expenditure, was devoted to the improvement of the college & could not be divided in any way among the members of the co. For several years there had been a surplus of receipts over expenditure, & this surplus was mainly derived from fees charged for the education of the pupils. Upon an appeal by the co. against an assessment to income tax under Schedule D. in respect of this surplus, the Comrs. for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts decided that a trade was being carried on & substantially affirmed the assessment:—Held: (1) the co. in providing education for money was carrying on a trade, notwithstanding that the whole purpose & object of the charity was the carrying on of the school, & that the surplus receipts, though applicable to the purposes of the charity, were profits or gains arising from a trade, & were chargeable to income tax under Schedule D.; (2) the profits from the school fees were not exempt from taxation under 1918 Act, s. 37 (1) (b), as being an annual payment forming part of the income of a body established for charitable purposes only.

Whether in any particular case activities which may properly be described as charitable, have become trading, or commercial, must always be a question of fact (LORD BLANESBURGH).—BRIGHTON COLLEGE v. MARRIOTT, [1926] A. C. 192; 134 L. T. 417; 42 T. L. R. 228; 70 Sol. Jo. 245, H. L.

128. Residence "for some temporary purpose only"—Permanent residence in Great Britain—Not occupied for six months in year of assessment.]—A statute imposing a duty on the property of persons residing in Great Britain, applies to persons residing there for any length of time, however short, although they may at the same time have a more permanent residence elsewhere. An exemption of persons coming to reside, "for some temporary purpose only, & not with any view or intent of establishing a residence therein & who shall not have actually resided in Great Britain for the period of six successive calendar months" does not include a person taking a house in London & furnishing & residing in it for a less period than six months at any one time, & who then goes elsewhere with his establishment & resides for the remainder of the year there, leaving behind him some one merely to take care of the house. Such a person is therefore within Income Tax Act, 1806 (c. 65), but not within the exemption of sect. 51.—A.-G. v. COOTE (1817), 4 Price, 183; 146 E. R. 433.

a. "Reside"—Master of British vessel—Greater part of year spent abroad—Family occupying house rented in United Kingdom.]—The master of a British vessel, trading to & from a port in the United Kingdom, & being tenant of a house there, in which his wife & family live, & in which he himself lives when in this country, is chargeable as "a person residing in the United Kingdom," notwithstanding that he may be absent during the greater part of the year.—Re YOUNG (1875), 1 Tax Cas. 57.—SCOT.

1. ——— Ordinary residence & business abroad—Yearly visits to United Kingdom.]—A British subject who had for many years had his only place of business & two residences, a town & country house, in Italy, became possessor of an estate in Great Britain in 1875, & was in the habit of living there during the summer months. During the financial year 1883-84 he & his family lived there from July 6 to Oct. 31:—Held: he was a person residing in Great Britain, & was therefore liable to be assessed for income tax on his trade profits for that year.—LLOYD v. g. ———.]—An American citizen having his ordinary residence & practising his profession in New York held for some years a lease of a furnished shooting lodge & shootings in Scotland. He resided at the shooting lodge for two months in each year & the lodge was ready for his use at any time. His residence in New York was also kept open for his use at any time.—Held: he was a person residing in the United Kingdom, & was therefore liable to assessment for income

& he did not fall within the exemption of a person in Great Britain for some temporary purpose only, & not with any view or intent of establishing his residence therein.—INLAND REVENUE v. CADWALADER (1904), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 146; 42 Sc. L. R. 117; 12 S. L. T. 449.—SCOT.

h. ——— Permanent residence abroad—Previous yearly visits to United Kingdom—House in wife's name in United Kingdom.]—A merchant carrying on business in Madras resided there, with his wife, during the whole of the year of assessment, not visiting the United Kingdom at all. His usual residence was in Madras, but, in nearly every year prior to the year of assessment, he had visited the United Kingdom, residing latterly with his wife & family in a house purchased in his wife's name out of moneys belonging to her & himself & owned by her.

United States had for the last twenty years lived on board his own yacht, which was anchored in tidal navigable waters within the port of Colchester in the county of Essex, obtaining provisions & necessaries from the nearest village. The yacht had always been kept fully manned & ready to go to sea at any moment:—Held: the owner was a "person residing in the United Kingdom" within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, sched. D. & was assessable to income tax accordingly.—BROWN v. BURT (1911), 81 L. J. K. B. 17; 105 L. T. 420; 27 T. L. R. 572; 5 Tax Cas. 667, C. A.

131. — Official of foreign company—Greater part of year spent abroad—Family occupying house rented in United Kingdom.—An agent in West Africa of a British Co. was assessed to income tax for the year 1919–20 under Schedule D., Case V., in respect of his earnings as agent. His duties were wholly performed in West Africa. Under his agreement with the co. the commission which formed the bulk of his remuneration was payable by the co. in the United Kingdom. The whole of this remuneration was paid by the co. into a banking account in England on which his wife had the power of drawing. He rented & was the rated occupier of a house in the United Kingdom in which his wife & family resided. He spent a few days in the United Kingdom during the year of assessment. The Special Comrs. held on appeal that he was resident in the United Kingdom & that he was assessable to income tax under Schedule D., Case V., in respect of his earnings as agent:—Held: (1) the Special Comrs. were entitled to regard him as resident in the United Kingdom; but (2) the earnings were not income from a foreign possession assessable under Schedule D., Case V., as the source of income was not wholly abroad; (3) in the circumstances the matter ought not to be remitted to the Comrs. to make an assessment under some other case.—*FOULSHAM v. Deft., a partner resident in England, & at the branch establishment, bought goods in England & shipped them to New York for the firm:—Held: the firm was not liable to be assessed to the income tax in respect of the profits earned by the firm from the purchase of the goods in England, & deft. was not bound to make a return of the profits of the firm, as the firm did not exercise trade in this country within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, but in America, where the profits were received & the principal place of business was situated. Acts, 1862 & 1867, & was afterwards registered for all purposes in Italy. It was founded with the object of carrying on the business of sulphur miners, manufacturers, & merchants in Italy, & for that purpose, of purchasing certain sulphur mines & plant there. So far as its affairs in the United Kingdom were concerned, the co. was managed by a board of directors, who held their meetings at the co.'s registered office in England. By the arts. of assocn., the working & disposal of the mines & the general business of the co., were wholly under the management of the board, subject in certain respects to the control of general meetings of the shareholders which were to be held in London. There was an Italian delegation, consisting of two or three members of the board resident in Italy, by whom all the practical management of the co.'s property & affairs in Italy was carried on. All the operations connected with the manufacture & sale of sulphur were exclusively carried on in Italy, where the co.'s profits, if any, were earned; & the dividends required for the English

On his return to the United Kingdom he ceased to be in the service of the co. or to receive remuneration from them. During the year of assessment he was the rated owner of a residence in the United Kingdom where his wife & family resided, & he was personally present there during four months of the year. Sums were paid by his direction out of his remuneration to his wife during his absence abroad & the balance of his earnings, less some sums expended by him abroad, were received by him in the United Kingdom:—Held: appl't. was resident in the United Kingdom during the year of assessment & was correctly charged with income tax on his remuneration so far as received by his wife or himself in the United Kingdom.—*THOMSON v. shareholders were the only parts of its profits sent to the United Kingdom. Of the shares, about one-third were held in England, & the rest in foreign countries. The Calcutta Co. was also incorporated under Cos. Acts of 1862 & 1867, but was not registered elsewhere than in England. It was founded with the object of buying jute mills in Bengal, carrying on the business of manufacturers & dealers in jute & other similar materials, & establishing agencies for the purposes of the co. throughout the world. The memorandum of assocn. provided that the co.'s registered office should be situate in England. In fact, the co. had no office or other place of business in the United Kingdom, though for registration it had an address in London at the office of one of the directors, & when meetings of the English members of the co. were held there it was by his favour. So far as its affairs in the United Kingdom were concerned, the co. was managed by a board of directors, who had, under the arts. of assocn., general powers similar to those conferred upon the board of the Cesena Co. The board had power to & did appoint agents & a director who resided in Calcutta & had the entire control of the business in India. The buying of the raw material, the manufacture & sale thereof, & all the operations connected with the co.'s business, were exclusively carried on in India, where alone the profits, if any, were earned. The co. had no property in the United Kingdom, & nothing came into the hands of the English directors except what was sent from India to pay necessary expenses in England, & except such proportion of the profits as was divisible among the shareholders in the United Kingdom. After receiving such proportion the directors called a meeting of the shareholders & declared the amount to be distributed as dividend for the current year. Of the shares, about one-third were held by shareholders in the United Kingdom. Both cos. contended that they were liable to income tax only upon the proportion of profits actually received in the United Kingdom:—Held: both cos. were "residing in the United Kingdom" within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, sched. D., & were liable to pay income tax upon the whole of their profits wherever earned.—CESENA SULPHUR CO. v. NICHOLSON, CALCUTTA JUTE MILLS CO. v. NICHOLSON (1876), 1 Ex. D. 428; 45 L. J. Q. & all the shareholders resided in the United Kingdom. The management of the business was vested in a board of directors, who met at the registered office, where the dividends were declared & paid. There was a resident manager abroad who had power to enter into contracts for the sale of the oil. The oil was sold abroad. A portion only of the profits made was remitted to England, the balance being retained for the purpose of sinking new wells & for other purposes of the co. in G.:—Held: the co. was chargeable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. 139. Control with local board of directors.—A co. incorporated in England carried on from there an hotel business in Egypt till 1908. In that year they altered their arts. of assocn. by resolutions which provided that the Egyptian business of the co. should be carried on & managed by a local board to the exclusion of any board of directors other than the local board. The local board were to meet only in Egypt, were to be affected by resolutions of general meetings in Egypt only, & were to exercise all the powers of the co. requisite for the Egyptian business. They were to retain the profits in Egypt & remit to England what might be necessary to pay dividends to shareholders resident here & for expenses incurred by the London board. The London board were to keep accounts, recommend dividends, & control the capital. The only business carried on by the co. was the Egyptian hotel business. Since the alteration of the arts. the London board had recommended a dividend & authorised the borrowing of a sum of money for that purpose. On an appeal by the co. from an assessment to income tax made upon the full amount of the co.'s profits the General Comrs. found that the controlling power of the co. remained with the London board & affirmed the assessment:—Held: (1) (LORD PARKER, LORD SUMNER) the division of the profits formed no part of the profit-earning business of the co. & the co.'s business was wholly carried on abroad, & consequently the co. was assessable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case V., in respect only of profits remitted to this country; (2) (LORD LOREBURN, LORD PARMOOR) there was evidence to support the finding of the Comrs., & the co. was assessable under Sched. D., Case I., in respect of the whole of its profits.—MITCHELL v. EGYPTIAN HOTELS, LTD. [1915] A. C. 1022; 84 L. J. K. B. 1772; 113 L. T. 882; 31 T. L. R. 546; 59 Sol. 140. ——— London brokers employed by local board for sale of produce.]—An English co. was formed to carry on the business of general merchants & mine owners in Bolivia. As from Apr. 1, 1917, the control & management of its Bolivian business was transferred to a local board in that country, the duties of the directors in London being confined to the declaration of dividends & the formal business necessary for its continuance as a co. The greater part of the produce of the mines was shipped to the United Kingdom, & the manager of the local board instructed a London firm, who had up to the date in question been the co.'s sole general, commercial & financial agents, to sell as brokers on commission all material consigned to them. In fact, however, the London firm continued the course of business previously followed by them, & did not themselves sell the mining produce as brokers, but employed brokers to do so, the brokers accounting for the proceeds to the London firm who in turn accounted to the local board after deducting (inter alia) payments made on bills of exchange drawn on the firm by the local board at the time of shipment, commission, & the cost of goods required by the local board in Bolivia purchased by the firm on the instructions of the manager of the co. itself.

The English co., while denying liability to income tax for 1917-18, made a return for that year requesting that it might be assessed by the Special Comrs. The Special Comrs., however, made an assessment under Schedule D., Case I., on the local board in the name of the London firm as agents. On appeal against the assessment the Special Comrs. decided that a trade was being carried on in the United Kingdom by the local board through the London firm who must be regarded as its duly authorised agents, & confirmed the assessment.

As the tax due under the assessment so confirmed remained unpaid, proceedings for its recovery were commenced by way of information against the individual members of the London firm, who then took the objection, not previously raised, that, as no requirement had been made either by the firm or by the local board that the Special Comrs. should assess them, the assessment was invalid as being ultra vires. Meanwhile as a precautionary measure before the time limit expired, the Special Comrs. made an alternative assessment for 1917-18, under Schedule D., Case I., on the co. itself in the same amount as that previously made on the local board. On appeal, the co. contended that this was a double assessment, & the Special Comrs. discharged the assessment on the ground that there was no reason for assuming that the previous assessment was not a valid one & sufficient to tax the profits charged by the second assessment:—Held: (1) having regard to the correspondence & other facts in the case, the London firm must be taken to have acquiesced in the jurisdiction of the Special Comrs. to make the assessment upon the local board in their name; but (2) that assessment was bad, since it was the co. itself that carried on the business, the local board acting throughout merely as servants of the co. & on its behalf; (3) by Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19),

s. 59 (4), the duty charged under that assessment should have been paid, but, as the Crown had only brought the information to trial at the same time as the hearing of the appeal against the assessment upon which it was based & that assessment was then held to be bad, the information must be dismissed; (4) the assessment under Schedule D., Case I., upon the co. itself was rightly made, inasmuch as (a) co. was resident in this country, & (b) the produce of its mines being marketed & dealt with in London, the co.'s business could not be held to be carried on wholly outside the United Kingdom in spite of the existence of the local board in Bolivia.—ARAMAYO FRANCKE MINES, LTD. v. ECCOTT, [1925] A. C. 634; 94 L. J. K. B. 688; 133 L. T. 561; 41 T. L. R. 542; 69 Sol. Jo. 825; *sub nom. A.-G. v. ARAMAYO, ARAMAYO & Co. v. OGSTON, ECCOTT v. 141. ——— Business carried on partly abroad—Part of profits retained abroad—Whole profit liable to tax.]—A co., registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, carried on business as bankers in London, with branches abroad. The directors & shareholders met at the head office in London, where the business of bankers, others than that of current banking accounts, was carried on, & from whence the affairs of the co. were directed & managed, the seat of power being in London with the directors. All usual banking business was conducted at the branches abroad by managers, subject to general directions & instructions for management issued by the head office in London. The co.'s dividends were paid in London, an adjustment of balances being from time to time made between the head office & the branches, & no special remittance of profits from the branches for the purpose of paying the dividends was ordinarily made. Of the profits earned at one of the branches in Mexico, a portion was not remitted to England, but was applied to paying, in Mexico, the consideration for certain rights & concessions purchased by the co. from another bank in that country:—Held: on the above facts, the co. were liable to pay income tax under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. D., in respect of the portion of the profits earned in Mexico & not remitted to England.—LONDON BANK OF MEXICO & SOUTH AMERICA v. APHORPE, [1891] 2 Q. B. 378; 60 L. J. Q. B. 653; 65 L. 142. ——— ——— ——— ———.]—Where a trade is carried on either wholly in the United Kingdom or partly within & partly outside it, & profits accrue therefrom to a person or a corpn. residing in the United Kingdom, the assessment for income tax falls under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I., & does not fall under Case V., & the duty is to be computed upon the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains of the trade, & not only upon the actual sums annually received in the United Kingdom. A co. registered under Cos. Acts, whose registered office was in England, were the proprietors of a railway in Brazil. The working of the railway was under the control & direction of, & the business of the co. was managed by, the directors in England. The directors purchased in England & sent out to Brazil the materials & plant necessary for the purposes of the railway. The accounts were kept & the balance sheet & reports were made out in London, where

With the exception of certain small amounts for transfer fees & annual interest on money, the whole revenue of the co. arose from moneys paid to them in Brazil for the carriage of passengers & goods on the railway & for other matters connected with the railway:—Held: it was not necessary to decide the question whether the business of the co. was carried on wholly in the United Kingdom, since it was clearly carried on partly in England & not, as in Colquhoun v. Brooks, No. 433, post, wholly outside the United Kingdom; & the co. were therefore assessable to income tax, under Sched. 144. ——— English office performing administrative functions only—Dual residence.]—A registered co. can have more than one residence for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts.

A co. was incorporated in 1870 under Cos. Acts, 1862 & 1867, with the object of constructing & working a railway in Sweden. The registered office of the co. was in London. In 1900 the co. leased its railway to a traffic company for fifty years at an annual rent of £33,500, which was to be paid to the co. in England. The co.'s articles were afterwards altered for the purpose of removing the control & management of the business of the co. from England to Sweden, & it was admitted that the business of the co. had since been & now was controlled & managed from the head office in Sweden. In 1920 a committee was appointed by the directors of the co. to transact merely formal administrative business in the United Kingdom, such as dealing with transfers of shares in the United Kingdom, affixing the seal of the co. to share & stock certificates, & signing cheques on the London banking account of the co. Since 1920 no meetings of the co. had been held in the United Kingdom. All dividends had been declared in Sweden, & no profits had been transmitted to the United Kingdom except in payment of dividends to the shareholders in the United Kingdom. Since 1920 the annual rent under the lease to the traffic co. had been paid to the co. in Sweden. On an appeal by the co. against an assessment to income tax under Schedule D., Case V., in respect of the rent of the railway for the years ending on

Apr. 5, 1921 & 1922, the Special Comrs., while finding that the business of the co. was controlled & managed from Sweden, held that the co. was a person residing in the United Kingdom & affirmed the assessment:—Held: the co. might have a residence here as well as abroad &, on that assumption, there was evidence to support the conclusion of the Comrs.—*SWEDISH CENTRAL RY. 145. Company incorporated by English Act of Parliament—Business carried on wholly abroad—Whole profits liable to tax.]—A joint-stock co., established & incorporated by Act of Parliament in England, but carrying on its business entirely abroad, is assessable to income tax upon the whole of the annual profits of its business, whether such profits are or are not remitted to this country, or are or are not distributed as dividends amongst its shareholders resident in England or abroad, or are applied to some other legitimate purposes of the co. abroad.

Appls., a co-partnership assocn., established to supply foreign cities & towns with gas, & incorporated by Act of Parliament in England, had offices in London, where the directors met & the business of the co. was transacted, & whence all the orders emanated. They possessed interests, of various natures & tenures, in gasworks in France & other continental countries, the profits of which arose wholly in those countries, & in such of them as had a tax equivalent to an income tax, those profits were there assessed to such tax. The entire profits of the co. arose & accrued abroad, &, in making their return to the income tax in England, the co. admitted their liability to the tax upon the amount or profits as from "foreign possessions" actually remitted to this country, & applicable to the payment of dividends to their shareholders, whether resident here or abroad, but denied their liability in respect of their profits ultra such remittance, & which were never transmitted to England or applied in payment of dividends, but were retained abroad & applied in liquidation of other legitimate engagements of the co. abroad. The special comrs. assessed the co. in respect of the whole of their profits, including the last-mentioned portion of them, & upon appeal therefrom, on a case stated for the ct.:—Held: (1) the co., though a foreign undertaking in a continental country, incorporated & resident in England, were in the position of a person residing in the United Kingdom, & were therefore taxable under Income Tax Acts, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I., 1853 (c. 34), Sched. D., in respect of the whole of the profits arising from their business abroad, including not only the portion remitted to England & applied in payment of dividends to shareholders resident there or abroad, but also the portion retained & applied to the other purposes of the co. abroad; (2) the provisions of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 60, Sched. A., No. III., r. 3, which treat gasworks as "property," relate exclusively to gasworks in this country, & do not include or relate to gasworks on the Continent, & such last-mentioned works are not "foreign possessions" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. Two of such breweries were in the State of New York, & were held in the name of an American co., all the shares in which, except three, were owned by the English co. Meetings of the English co. were held at the registered office in England, where the books were kept. The dividends were declared in England by the co. in general meeting. The amount required for the dividends to the English shareholders were transmitted to England, the dividends on the shares held in America being paid there. The co. contended that none of the profits made in America were chargeable with income tax except as far as they were transmitted to England, & that if any such profits were chargeable, such portion as was derived from the breweries in New York should be exempted by reason of the same being the property of an American co.:—Held: the case was not distinguishable from that of *Jones, Frank, Brewing Co. v. 149. ——— Directing power in English company.]—An English co. registered under Cos. Acts, & with a registered office in London was formed to acquire the whole or any part of the capital stock of the St. L. B. A. in America, to carry on the business of brewers, & for other purposes. It acquired 50,872 shares out of 50,886 of the St. L. B. A. The brewing business upon which the whole of the profits depend is carried on exclusively at St. Louis in America under the immediate management of the directors of the American corp'n. These directors in the printed reports of the English co. are termed the "board of management in St. Louis." The banking account of the American corp'n. & all the books are kept at St. Louis. An English accountant is appointed by applt. co., who proceeds to America at the end of each financial year & audits the accounts of the eighteen breweries at St. Louis. At the same time a balance sheet of the American corp'n. & a profit & loss account are prepared showing the result of the brewing business for the past year. A copy is forwarded by the American corp'n. to applt. co., & the directors of applt. co. then consider the accounts & agree upon the rate of dividend which they consider should be declared. They communicate their decision to the American corp'n., who then have always declared a dividend upon the shares of the American corp'n. at the rate mentioned. The directors of the American corp'n. having declared the dividend, the directors of applt. co. then declare a dividend upon the shares of applt. co. No dividend warrant is issued by the American corp'n. Each shareholder upon production of his certificate is entitled to be paid the amount due to him. The amount of dividend on the shares held by applt. co. is sent over in bulk by telegram, so far as it is required for the English shareholders

& for the current expenses in England. Such portion of the dividend as is required for American shareholders is retained in America by the American co. & distributed there direct:—Held: this was a business carried on in America by the English co., & they were therefore liable to pay income tax on the whole of the profits.—ST. 150. ———.]—An English co., registered under Cos. Acts & having its registered office in London, was formed for the purpose of acquiring the shares in an American brewery co., & for the purpose of carrying on a brewery business. The vendors of the American co. sold to the English co. all the shares except three, in the American co., & all the personal property of the American co. was transferred to the English co. In order to avoid any difficulties with regard to the American laws of real property, the American co. was kept on foot. The English co. found the capital for carrying on the brewery business which was wholly carried on in America. All the profits were earned in America. The directors of the English co. had the entire right of control of the affairs of the American co., & of the staff & business in America with full power to appoint or dismiss any of the managers or officials of the business in America. In fact, the directors of the English co. delegated these powers to the managers of the brewery in America, who were also directors of the American co., & appointed them managers of the business in America. A portion of the profits earned was transmitted to England for the expenses incurred in England & for distribution amongst the English shareholders. The rest of the profits remained in America, & were distributed among American shareholders:—Held: the business was in fact partly carried on in England, & therefore the English co. was liable to pay income tax upon the whole of the profits earned by the business, & not merely upon that part of the profits which was transmitted to England.—APTHORPE v. PETER SCHOENHOFEN BREWING CO., LTD. 155. General rule—Place of residence place of management & control—Question of fact.—A foreign corpn. may reside in this country for the purposes of income tax. The test of residence is not where it is registered, but where it really keeps house & does its real business. The real business is carried on where the central management & control actually abides. Whether any particular case falls within that rule is a pure question of fact, to be determined not according to the construction of this or that regulation or bye-law, but upon a scrutiny of the course of business & trading.

Applt. co. was registered in the Cape Colony, & its business was mining for diamonds in mines which it possessed in South Africa, & selling the diamonds when found. Its head office was in South Africa, & general meetings were always held there. Some of the directors resided in South Africa, & weekly meetings of the directors were held there. But the majority of the directors resided in England, & the meetings in London were the meetings at which the real control was exercised in all the important business of the co., except the actual mining operations. The sales of the diamonds were controlled by the London board:—Held: the co. was resident in the United Kingdom for the purposes of income tax.—DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES, LTD. v. HOWE, [1906] A. D., such finding is final, & the ct., on a case stated, will only consider whether there was evidence to justify such finding.

A co. resides for the purpose of income tax assessment, at the place where its real business is carried on, that is where the control & management of the co. is exercised, notwithstanding that the details of its trade may not be ordinarily dealt with there.

Where the business of a co. registered abroad was controlled by a board of directors who met in England, & all the ordinary stock of the co. was held in England:—Held: (2) there was evidence that the co. was resident in the United Kingdom, although the co. did not do any trade in the United Kingdom, & had not any banking account here.—AMERICAN THREAD Co. v. 159. Foreign bank having business in London—Meetings held & dividends declared in London.—The Imperial Ottoman Bank was a corpn. created by Turkish law. Its seat was fixed by the concession & the statutes which constituted it at Constantinople, with power to establish branches & agencies at other places. It was the state bank of Turkey, where it was a bank of issue, & was charged with the collection of the revenue, & with certain operations relating to the currency, & with the payment of interest on the public debt, & received from the state a subsidy on account of the public business transacted by it. On its creation it took over & continued to carry on the business of an English bank in London; & since its creation in 1863, the annual meetings of shareholders had always been held, & dividends declared, in London, though by its statutes the annual meetings might be held at any place which the committee of management might fix:—Held: the bank was not liable to be assessed to income tax in respect of its whole profits, as a "person residing within the United Kingdom" under the first clause of Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. Company registered abroad—Head office abroad—Control in United Kingdom.—Applt., who resided in Aberdeen, was the sole owner of a business of woollen warehousemen carried on by managers on his behalf at Toronto, Canada. Applt. alone was entitled to the profits & liable for the losses in connection with the business, & it was found, as a fact, by the district comrs. that he was vested with the sole right to manage & control every department of its affairs:—Held: applt. assessable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I., & not under Case V. on remittances only.—OGILVIE v. KRITON (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) (1908), 5 Tax Cas. 338.—SCOT.

m. — — — — —.—A co. incorporated in England, & having its registered office in London, conducted its Australian business at Melbourne in Victoria, & its practical operations of mining & treating & smelting ore at Broken Hill & Cockle Creek in New South Wales. By a contract made in London the co. agreed to sell to purchasers a large quantity of concentrates produced from Broken Hill slimes, delivery of which was to be made at Broken Hill in instalments extending over a period of years. Pursuant to the contract, the purchasers paid a sum of £63,000 in advance, but before any concentrates were delivered they made default in further payments which had become due. An agreement was then made in London by which the original contract was cancelled as from the date of the cancelling agreement, & the co. were to be entitled to retain for their use all moneys which had been paid under the contract. No concentrates or slimes were ever appropriated, set apart, or treated by the co. for the purchasers. Of the £63,000 the balance held by the co., after deduction of commission & brokerage, was £61,425:—Held: for income tax purposes the £61,425 should be treated as profits from the business of mining, etc., carried on by the co. in New South Wales & taxable as such subject however to the co.'s right to show that portion of it was not attributable to the business carried on in New South Wales.—*Re MEEKS, TAXATION COMRS. v. n. — — — — —.—A co. whose directors & head office were in Bellary wherefrom the business of the co. was controlled had a factory in Raichur (i.e. in the Nizam's Dominions), earned all its income only in Raichur by pressing cotton for its customers & usually paid its dividends according to its agreement only at that place:—Held: notwithstanding the fact that some money was received in Bellary from Raichur for office expenses & for convenient payment in Bellary of dividends to some shareholders, the co. could not be assessed to income tax in British India as no portion of its income "accrued, arose or was received" in British India.—*BOARD OF REVENUE v. o. — — — — —.—Deft. co. had its registered & head office in Melbourne. It owned extensive kauri forests in New Zealand, & had many timber mills & timber depôts in New Zealand. It carried on business in Victoria, New South Wales, & elsewhere, & in New Zealand. Its principal business in New Zealand was the conversion of its timber-trees into timber, partly in balk, partly in fitches & boards of various dimensions. A large part of the timber, in this condition, was exported by the co. from New Zealand, to Sydney, where parts of it were cut up into smaller dimensions. Part of the timber so exported was sold, either in balk, or after being so cut up, in Australia & England; part was manufactured in Sydney into doors, sashes, & other articles, & was then sold in its manufactured condition. The purchase-moneys were received by the co. in Melbourne. Other portions of the timber were sold in New Zealand:—Held: the co. was not liable to income tax in New Zealand upon the whole of the profits made by it upon timber exported by it from New Zealand & sold elsewhere, whether or not after further cutting or manufacture outside of New Zealand, but was liable only upon that part of the profit which was derived by it from the business carried on by it in New Zealand.—*TAXES COMR. v. p. Operations carried on within colony—Head office abroad—Product sold abroad.—Mining cos. carried on their operations in the Colony of N. S. W. upon Crown lands held under leases from the Crown. The head offices of the cos. were outside the colony. The ore was extracted from the soil, & converted into a marketable product in the colony, but the product was afterwards sold, & the price of it received, outside the colony:—Held: the cos. had income liable to taxation as being derived either from lands of the Crown or from trade or from some other source, & were not exempt on the ground that the income was earned outside the colony.—*TAXATION COMRS. v. SUB-SECT. 3.—CARRIED ON IN THE UNITED KINGDOM BY PERSONS, COMPANIES AND FIRMS RESIDENT ABROAD.

A. What are.

166. Whether factor or agent in receipt of profits essential.]—Appls., manufacturers of wines in France, domiciled & resident there, through an agent resident in the United Kingdom were advertised as sellers of wines, & through the agent were in the habit of making contracts for the sale to customers in the United Kingdom of wines, which were forwarded direct from France to the customers, the latter paying the cost of the packing & carriage of the wines. Appls. had no banking account, or stock of wines, or office or establishment in the United Kingdom, but their names appeared on an inside door of the agent's office. Payments by the customers were made sometimes to the agent & transmitted by the agents to appls., & sometimes by bills of exchange drawn by appls. on the customers. The agents had no interest in any sale other than their commission on the transaction:—Held: a "trade" was "exercised within the United Kingdom" within the meaning of Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. D., in respect of the annual profits arising from which income tax might be charged.

A foreigner not resident within the United Kingdom may be assessed to the income tax under Income Tax Acts, 1853 (c. 34), & 1842 (c. 35), in respect of annual profits accruing to him from a trade exercised within the United Kingdom, notwithstanding that he has not within the United Kingdom a factor or agent in receipt of the profits within the meaning of sect. 41 of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), the provisions of this sect. being in aid & not in derogation of the duties granted by Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34).—WERLE & CO. v. markets. A small portion of the co.'s goods was sold in the United Kingdom. The sole director of the co. resided in the United States of America & under the arts. of assocn. he exercised, so long as he remained a director, exclusive & supreme control of the co., although as a shareholder he did not possess a majority of the votes attaching to the shares. 168. — Foreign cable company—Profits from messages sent from United Kingdom.]—Appls., a foreign co. domiciled in Copenhagen, had three marine cables in connection with the telegraph lines of the Post Office in the United Kingdom. They had also work rooms with clerks in London, Newcastle & Aberdeen. Messages from this country were forwarded over the lines of the Post Office & the cables of appls. to Denmark, & thence by their wires & the wires of foreign govts. to Russia, China, Japan & India. The total charges paid for transmitting such messages were collected by the Post Office, & after deducting their dues, handed to appls., who retained the amount due to them for the transmission of messages over their cables & lines, & paid the residue to the various govts. & cos. respectively entitled to it. No profits were made by appls. from the transmission of messages over the land lines in the United Kingdom:—Held: appls. must be taken to exercise a trade in the United Kingdom under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, sched. D., & they were chargeable to income tax on the balance of profits or gains from their receipts in this country from the transmission of messages.—ERICHSEN v. LAST (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 414; 51 L. 169. — Goods not consigned to agent.]—Appls., a firm of wine merchants, carrying on business & residing at Bordeaux, shipped wines either direct to purchasers in the United Kingdom or through agents carrying on business therein, such agents receiving a commission on all wines sold in the United Kingdom. In the offices of the agents the French firm rented a room, where they kept a clerk & had their name painted; & during four months in every year one of their partners stayed at an hotel in London for the purpose of soliciting custom. Having been charged with income tax in respect of profits made in the United Kingdom, & the assessment having been affirmed by the comrs.:—Held: (1) appls. were not resident in the United Kingdom so as to be chargeable with income tax under the first clause of Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), sched. D., but they exercised a trade within the United Kingdom, & were chargeable under the second clause of the sched.; (2) an assessment on the firm is good, as the powers of assessing the agent under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 41, does not relieve the principal from his liability to assessment where he can be served with the proper

170. ——— Some sale from stock in England.]—Appls., a firm of wine merchants at Rheims, employed an agent in London for the sale of their wines in England. He obtained orders & sent them direct to applts. at Rheims. Small orders were supplied from a stock of wine kept in London; larger orders were supplied by applts. direct to the customers. Amounts due were collected by the agent on behalf of applts., who kept a banking account in London. Drafts given in payment were sent to applts. for indorsement. The agent received a commission on all wine of applts. sold in England:—Held: applts. carried on a trade within the United Kingdom within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, sched. (2) A firm carrying on an extensive business as merchants in Java was associated with a London firm, which acted as their agents in England. A case was stated arising out of assessments to income tax made upon the London firm, as agents of the Java firm, for the decision of the Ct. as to liability to tax in respect of profits deemed to arise to the Java firm from the exercise of trade in the United Kingdom. The Java firm, carrying on the business of merchants, sold goods through the London firm by contracts made in London, but the goods were not consigned to the London firm:—Held: the Java firm was, through the London firm, exercising a trade in the United Kingdom.

It is true that the goods were not consigned to the London firm nor was the purchase-money paid to them, & that in every case the goods were delivered by the Java firm to purchasers outside the United Kingdom; but the contracts were made in London through the agency of the London firm, & the purchase-money was in most cases paid through a London bank. I think it is clear that this part of the trade of the Java firm was exercised within the United Kingdom (LORD CAVE, C.).

(3) The British Govt. during the War bought 54,000 tons of sugar from the Java firm through the British firm, i.e. the contract was made in England, the sugar was to be delivered in England, & the price was to be paid in England:—Held:

an assessment [on the Java firm as exercising a trade in the United Kingdom] was rightly made.

(4) Further transactions with the British Govt. for the purchase of large consignments of sugar took place under which the Java firm purchased sugar for the Sugar Commission under agreements negotiated by the London firm. The successive contracts were made upon the terms of a model contract providing for delivery in London & for payment in London:—Held: the Java firm was exercising a trade in London with regard to these transactions.

(5) Further transactions took place in respect of which the Java firm acted in Java as agents for the British Govt. to buy sugar for them on commission:—Held: a trade was being carried on in Java & not in London in respect of these transactions.—*MACLAINE & Co. v. 173. ———.]—An Egyptian firm habitually sold cotton in England through one agent in Manchester. Sometimes the firm cabled to the agent that they had a specified quantity of cotton for sale at a price not below a specified limit & upon terms fixed by them in each case; sometimes the agent obtained from intending purchasers offers to buy cotton, which offers he transmitted to the firm for their approval or rejection. In the first case the agent sold the cotton according to the firm's instructions. In the second case, if the firm approved the offers they informed the agent & he accepted the offers & made the necessary contracts in each case. The firm then shipped the goods & drew on the purchaser a bill payable in London for an amount including the cost of the goods & freight & insurance from Alexandria. They discounted the bill with bankers in Alexandria who sent the bill with the bill of lading to the purchaser. The goods were released when the purchaser had discharged or made himself responsible for the bill, but not before; & they were released to him direct & not through the agent. The agent was not responsible to the firm for bad debts. He was at liberty to do, but did not in fact do any business other than that of the firm. The firm sold some of their cotton in Liverpool through a broker:—Held: (1) the firm was exercising a trade in England, the contracts for the sale of the cotton having been made in England & the price of the goods being payable in England; & probably delivery of the goods taking place there, though it was not necessary to decide this; (2) the firm was exercising the trade through an agent being an authorised person carrying on its regular agency within Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 31 (6), & was therefore chargeable in the name of the agent to income tax in respect of profits & gains arising through the agency.—*WILCOCK v. agents & their purchasers that the agents & not the foreign principals were the vendors, there was no corresponding presumption as between the foreign principals & the agents that the property in the goods had passed from the principals to the agents; (2) the sales by the agents in this country were as between them & their principals made on behalf of the principals, & the principals were consequently liable to income tax as exercising a trade within the United Kingdom within the meaning of Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. D.—WATSON v. SANDIE & HULL, [1898] 1 Q. B. 326; 67 L. J. Q. B. 319; 77 L. T. 528; 46 W. R. 202; 14 T. L. R. 124; 42 Sol. Jo. 151; 3 Tax Cas. 611, D. C.

On approval of foreign principal.]—A foreign co. had an agent in England, who on receipt of an offer for the co.'s goods, communicated that offer to the co., & on receiving the authority of the co., accepted the offer. All goods for delivery in the United Kingdom were put on board ship by the co. free at Boston, U.S.A., consigned to Liverpool in the name of the agent, who distributed them to the customers:—Held: (1) the contracts with the English customers & the delivery of the goods were made in this country, & the co. was exercising a trade here.

(2) Even if the contract had been made in New York, the delivery of the goods here would have constituted an exercising of trade in this country.—TURNER v. RICKMAN (1898), 4 Tax Cas. 25.

178. — Acceptances posted by agent in United Kingdom.]—Applt. B., a resident in the United Kingdom, was appointed as the agent for the United Kingdom, Canada & Australia by Messrs. T. S. B., who carried on the business of silk manufacturers & merchants at Cernobbio, Italy. Applt. took orders from persons in the United Kingdom & transmitted them to Messrs. T. S. B. in Italy, who, if they decided to accept the offer, sent a form of acceptance to applt., who posted it in the United Kingdom to the purchaser Messrs. T. S. B. sent the goods to the purchaser direct through forwarding agents in Italy. It did not appear whether the forwarding agents were employed by the vendors or by the purchasers, nor who paid the freight from Italy to the United Kingdom, nor at whose risk the goods were during transit. The invoice for the goods was sent in blank to applt., who completed it & forwarded it to the customers. Payment was made by cheques sent by purchasers direct to Messrs. T. S. B. in Italy. Applt. had no authority to accept payment on behalf of the Italian firm. Applt. appealed against assessments to income tax under Schedule D. made upon Messrs. T. S. B. in the name of applt. as their agent, on the ground that there was in the circumstances no trade exercised by Messrs. T. S. B. in the United Kingdom. Applt. also contended that he was not an agent assessable on behalf of Messrs. T. S. B. & that his assessment was prohibited by Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 31 (6).

The Special Comrs. held that Messrs. T. S. B. did not carry on a trade within the United Kingdom:—Held: (1) Messrs. T. S. B. carried on a trade in the United Kingdom through the contracts with purchasers which were made in the United Kingdom by the posting by applt. of the acceptances of orders; (2) the fact that the acceptances contained the words: "On account of present difficulties we cannot guarantee execution of this order" did not prevent the contracts from being made by the posting of the acceptances, for the purpose of the question as to where the trade was exercised; (3) applt. was not in the circumstances "a broker or general commission agent" & was not within the exception of Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 31 (6).—BELFOUR v. MACE (1925), 133 L. T. 385.

179. — Agent authorised to quote prices—But not to accept orders.]—Appls., who were silk manufacturers in Italy, had agents in London, who were general commission agents. These agents had no authority to accept orders on behalf of applts., but were able to quote prices to intending customers, who paid the agents for the goods. The agents deducted their commission from the moneys so received. Appls. were assessed to income tax in the name of their agents:—Held: applts. exercised a trade in the United Kingdom, & as the agents did not occupy, in relation to applts., the position of brokers or general commission agents but were really working on

1771. Trade contracts made by agent within United Kingdom—On approval of foreign principal.]—Appls. carried on business as merchants & commission agents in the United Kingdom, & sold goods on behalf of a firm of manufacturers at Verviers, Belgium. There was no written agency agreement. Offers received by applts. were submitted to the manufacturers for approval, & if approved, were accepted by applts. on behalf of the manufacturers. The goods were consigned to applts. for delivery to customers in the United Kingdom. Appls. received payment for the goods & discharged the accounts on behalf of the manufacturers. Appls. sent sale accounts to the manufacturers monthly & rendered a quarterly statement for expenses & commission. They were paid by commission on business done & were liable for one-half of the bad debts:—Held: the manufacturers were exercising a trade within the United Kingdom, & the decision of the comrs. in assessing applts., as agents in respect of the profits derived by the manufactures from the exercise of such trade, was right.—MACPHERSON & Co. v. MOORE (1912), 6 Tax Cas. 107.—SCOT.

r. — Goods shipped from abroad.]—Appls. were the agents in the United Kingdom of a Parisian co. which owned & worked phosphate mines in French territory in Algeria. They were remunerated by a commission which was remitted from Paris. Appls. had authority to sell the co.'s phosphates without reference to the co. at or over minimum prices fixed by the co. According to the documents used the sales to the purchasers purported to be made by the co. through applts. The phosphates were shipped by the co. at Bona, in Algeria, no stock being kept by applts. The bills of lading, which arrived while the goods were still at sea, were endorsed as soon as received by applts. to the purchasers & passed to the latter with the invoices & insurance policies, in exchange for an instalment of the price. Payments were to be made by cash in London, & this involved the use of crossed cheques, which were drawn by the purchasers in favour sometimes of the co., at other times of applts. The cheques as received, endorsed where necessary, were invariably sent by applts. to the co. & were in no case paid into a bank in the United Kingdom:—Held: the co. did not exercise a trade in the United Kingdom, & applts. were not agents having the receipt of profits.—CROOKSTON BROTHERS v. FURTADO (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) (1910), 5 Tax Cas. 602.—SCOT.

t. — Foreign shipping company.]—A co. registered in Christiania, where its registered office was, & its share list & books were kept, & where the shareholders' meetings were held, owned a ship, & elected as managers two gentlemen in Norway, one of whom acted as director of the management. appls.' staff, applts. were assessable in the name of their agents.—GAVAZZI v. MACE (1926), 42 T. L. R. 389.

180. — Price not controlled by foreign principal—Profits divided.]—Appls. were an English limited co. carrying on business in London as manufacturers & sellers of incandescent & other mantles, &, under an agreement with a Dutch co. called the R. Union, were the sole sellers in the United Kingdom of the goods manufactured by the R. Union, which had its head office in Holland, where its books were kept & its general business transacted. Appls.' transactions with the R. Union formed only a small part of applts.' business. Under the agreement the R. Union manufactured mantles & added to the cost 10 per cent. for expenses, & applts. sold the mantles in England at the best possible price. Appls. were entitled to 5 per cent. commission for their expenses & the del credere, & the profits were divided. Appls. agreed to keep a separate day-book showing the selling prices, & this book was to be open to the directors of the R. Union. The name of the R. Union did not appear on the invoices sent by applts. to their customers in England, but applts.' premises had on them the name of applts. as agents for the R. Union, though it was not proved that this had been authorised by the R. Union. An assessment to income tax was made on applts. as agents for the R. Union in respect of profits derived by the R. Union from exercising the trade of vendors of gas mantles within the United Kingdom. The comrs. confirmed the assessment, & their decision was affirmed. On appeal:—Held: there was evidence on which the general comrs. could find that the R. Union was exercising a trade within the United Kingdom within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. D., & on which they could find that applts. were the agents of the R. Union within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 41.—WEISS, BIELLER & BROOKS, LTD. v. FARMER, [1923] 1 K. B. 226; 92 L. J. K. 181. — Foreign principals themselves agents.]—A firm carrying on an extensive business as merchants in Java was associated with a London firm, which acted as their agents in England. A case was stated arising out of assessments to income tax made upon the London firm, as agents of the Java firm, for the decision of the ct. as to liability to tax in respect of profits deemed to arise to the or dividends:—Held: the co. was not resident in the United Kingdom, but it exercised a trade within the United Kingdom, for the profits of which the Glasgow firm, as its agents, were assessable to income tax.—WINGATE (JAMES) & CO. v. WEBBER (1897), 3 Tax Cas. 569.—SCOT.

a. Contracts made & executed abroad—Orders obtained by agent abroad.]—As the agent of a firm situated in Paris, A. bought raw skins in Madras & exported them to Paris where the firm sold them for profit:—Held: as the profits accrued solely in France they were not taxable in British India:—Held: further, s. 33 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act did not create a new category of income which could be charged under the Act in addition to incomes mentioned under s. 5 as chargeable under the Act but that s. 33 (1) merely provided a machinery by which non-resident foreigners (amongst others), trading in British India or having business connection in British India could be taxed on income derived by them in British India (*Greenwood v. c. Principal place of business abroad—Foreign shipping company—Carrying goods from Australia.]—A shipping co. whose principal place of business was in England carried goods from Fremantle to London, but the ship leaving Australia carried them only to Singapore, where they were transhipped to other ships of the same

Java firm from the exercise of trade in the United Kingdom.

(1) The Java firm collected goods from planters in the East Indies, undertaking to sell them on commission on behalf of the owners. If such goods were sent to London for disposal, the London firm made contracts for the sale of the goods, delivered the goods to the purchasers, received payment for them, &, after deducting commission, accounted for the proceeds to the Java firm, which firm in turn accounted to the person who consigned the goods:—Held: the Java firm was exercising a trade or vocation in this country.

(2) The Java firm, carrying on the business of merchants, transmitted goods to the London firm, which sold them through brokers or otherwise:—Held: the Java firm was, through the London firm, exercising the trade of merchants in the United Kingdom.—*MACLAINE & CO. v. The cars were to be delivered on rail at the American co.'s factory in the United States, & to be at the sole risk of the Australian co. from that point. The price f.o.b. rail was fixed by the agreement, & the Australian co. was to pay freight, insurance, Customs duty, packing & all other incidental forwarding charges, & was allowed five months from the date of

They had an office in London in charge of a qualified engineer who was their whole time servant. A co. was registered in Cape Colony as a limited co. & as an incorporated co., but was never registered in the United Kingdom. The co. owned diamond mines in South Africa, & its business consisted in finding diamonds there & selling them. By the arts. of assocn. it was provided that the head office of the co. should be at K., in Cape Colony, or in such other place or country as the directors should think fit. The co. had offices at K. & in London. There were regular weekly meetings of the directors at K., where also all meetings of shareholders were held, & the general accounts were kept. It was provided also that some of the directors should reside in South Africa, & some, sufficient to form a quorum, in the United Kingdom. The sale of the co.'s diamonds was always carried out by the directors resident in the United Kingdom. It was done by means of a yearly contract arranged between the directors resident in the United Kingdom & a syndicate of London diamond merchants. These directors also carried through other important financial operations on behalf of the company:—Held: it exercised its trade within the United Kingdom, so as to be chargeable with income tax under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 2, Sched. 189. Foreign bank issuing loans in United Kingdom—Issue made through London banks.]—The Industrial Bank of Japan carried on business in Japan, & had a privileged position with the Japanese Govt. Between 1906 & 1912 it was authorised to offer & did offer some seven loans for subscription in the United Kingdom. For this purpose, as it had no office in London, it employed three banks in London to issue & distribute prospectuses of the loans & to receive the subscriptions. One of these banks, appts., collected from the other two banks the subscriptions received by them, & after deducting mission was earned there, the balance of the proceeds of the sales being remitted to New Zealand after deducting the commission & any advances made by the co. against the produce so shipped:—Held: the co. did not carry on business in New Zealand, & were not liable to pay income tax there, their profits not being derived from or received in New Zealand.—*LOVELL & CHRISTMAS, LTD. v. their commission appts. remitted the whole amount of the subscriptions to the Bank in Japan or to the Japanese Govt. The three banks in London had accounted for & paid income tax on all the commissions received by them, for work done in connection with the loans, & there was no evidence that anything beyond these commissions was payable or paid to the Industrial Bank for what was done in this country. Comrs. having found that during the years in question the Industrial Bank was carrying on in the United Kingdom the business of issuing loans on behalf of clients, & was chargeable to income tax in respect of its profits from such business to the extent to which those profits were earned in the United Kingdom:—Held: the Industrial Bank had not traded or carried on business in the United Kingdom in connection with the loans, but had merely employed appts. as bankers to carry out the business, & were therefore not chargeable with income tax on their profits.—*YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK v. 190. Joint adventures by English & foreign firms—Profits from joint transactions.—Applt. firms carry on business as cotton merchants & brokers in Liverpool & America respectively. Under an arrangement concluded between them the American firm buys cotton in America on account of the Liverpool firm, & pays for the goods so purchased by drawing bills on the latter firm. The cotton is usually sold in the United Kingdom by the Liverpool firm, but sales are occasionally effected in America by the American firm when the markets there are favourable. The American firm receives a commission on purchases & bears the office expenses in America incidental to the buying. The Liverpool firm bears the Liverpool office expenses in connection with the sales & takes credit in account for a commission on sales. The cotton consigned to Liverpool is sent on c.i.f. terms for account & risk of the Liverpool firm. Accounts of the joint transactions are made up annually & profits or losses thereon are shared or borne equally. Appls. contended that no partnership existed between them, that the payments to the American firm were merely remuneration for services & were a business expense of the Liverpool firm, that the American firm's business was wholly transacted outside, & its proprietor not resident in, the United Kingdom, & that its profits were accordingly outside the scope of the United Kingdom income tax:—Held: as regards the joint transactions in cotton, applt. firms carried on a partnership, the profits from which were assessable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, sched. 199. Trade set up within three years—Company formed to acquire existing partnership business.—RYHOPE COAL Co. v. FOYER, No. 208, post.

200. — Single ship company—Trading with successive ships.—A limited co. registered under the Cos. Acts, 1862 to 1900, was formed to purchase & trade with a certain steamship mentioned in the memorandum of assocn. &, in the event of the loss, sale, or disposition of that vessel or of any vessel subsequently acquired, to acquire from time to time some other steamship, but so that the co. should not own at any one time more than one ship; & the co. was to carry on the business of shipowners with respect to such steamship. The articles of assocn. provided that there should be a manager of the co. in lieu of directors; that the manager might insure the steamship for the time being owned by the co.; & that he might in the event of the loss of the steamship for the time being owned by the co., with the approval of the shareholders, buy another steamship out of the proceeds of the insurances of the ship so lost, or he was to divide & pay the net proceeds of the insurances ratably amongst the shareholders & wind up the co.

The co. acquired the steamship mentioned in the memorandum of assocn. & traded with her from 1901 till Apr. 1, 1906, when she was lost at sea. In May, 1906, the manager of the co., with the approval of the shareholders, purchased a second steamship out of the proceeds of the insurances on the first. On Oct. 17, 1906, the co. commenced trading with the second steamship:—Held: the co. carried on one trade or adventure throughout with the two ships in succession, & the trade or adventure which they carried on with the second ship was not first set up on Oct. 17, 1906, when that ship began trading. Therefore, for the purpose of assessment to income

202. Diminution of profits due to war—Finance Act, 1914 (Sess. 2) (c. 7), s. 13 (1).]—(1) A co. made profits for their financial year 1913 of £76,000, for the year 1914 of £36,000, & for the year 1915 of £16,000. For the year 1916 they made a loss of £11,000. The diminution in their profits for the year 1916, due to circumstances attributable directly or indirectly to the war, was taken to be the sum of £6,000. The co. were assessed by the comrs. to income tax in respect of the year 1916 upon the average profits of the three years preceding the year of assessment, namely, 1913, 1914, 1915, in the sum of £42,000, less the sum of £6,000, being the amount of diminution of the profits & gains in the year of assessment attributable to the war. Upon appeal from that assessment, the judge held that the combined result of above sub-sect., the Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 133, & the Revenue Act, 1865 (c. 30), s. 6, was that the co. were liable to be assessed for the year 1916 upon the average of the profits for the year of assessment & the two preceding years, the profits for the year of assessment being taken to be the average of the profits for the three years preceding the year of assessment less the amount by which the profits of the co., during the year of assessment, had been diminished by circumstances attributable to the war. Upon that footing he held that the co. were taxable on £29,000, & therefore entitled to a relief of £13,000 upon the original assessment:—Held: the judge had not given effect to the Revenue Act, 1865 (c. 30), s. 6, which provided that no reduction should be made unless the profits of the year of assessment were proved to be less than the profits for one year on the average of the last three years, including the year of assessment.

In ascertaining the result of the co.'s trading in 1916 the profits should be determined by an examination of the books & the preparation of an account, excluding from the debit side all non-war losses, & not by reference to any average profits or the profits of a preceding year. Having thus ascertained the profits of the year of assessment, an average must be taken of those profits & the profits of the two preceding years, & that average would show the amount by which the original assessment should be altered. In the present case no examination of the books having been made, the materials for that method of computation were not before the ct., but adopting the only possible method of estimating the non-war losses the result was as follows: As between the years 1915 & 1916 there was a diminution of £27,000. Of this £6,000 represented war losses, & £21,000 non-war losses. Excluding the latter there was a profit of £10,000. The profits of the last three years respectively, including the year of assessment, stood, therefore, at £36,000, £16,000, & £10,000, producing an average of £21,000, to which amount the original assessment of £42,000 must be reduced.

(2) Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 133, as amended by Revenue Act, 1865 (c. 30), s. 6, did not confer upon the comrs. an absolute discretion to amend an assessment to any figure they thought fit, provided the assessment was not reduced lower than the basis fixed in the Act of 1865. They had power only to amend the assessment having regard to the actual profits & gains from the taxable profits shown by the accounts. The co. contended that as the accounts were made up to a date some time subsequent to Apr. 5, 1912, they should not, so far as subsequent to that date, be taken into account & that the assessment should be computed on the basis of a proportion of the profits resulting from the first two voyages which ended on July 25, 1912:—Held: the contention of the co. was wrong & the assessment had been made on the proper basis.—GLENSLOY S.S. Co., LTD. v. LETHAM (1914), 6 Tax Cas. 453.—SCOT.

k. — Separate trades or single trade with different departments.]—A firm of boilermakers having secured a large shell contract from the French Govt. converted their business into a private limited co. in Feb. 1915, with objects which included the carrying on of the trades or businesses of boilermaking, engineering, & machinery, armaments & shellmaking. The shell manufacture was carried on in new premises erected for the purpose adjacent to, but having no intercommunication with, the original works, which continued to be used exclusively for the manufacture of boilers. Each manufacture had its own separate plant, separate workmen & technical & clerical staff, & separate set of books & trading accounts, but both manufactures were under the same general direction & management. All the accounts were brought into one common profit & loss account & balance sheet, bank interest & management expenses being charged against the co. generally without apportionment. The manufacture of shells ceased in Apr. 1918, the staff engaged thereon was dispersed, the shellmaking plant was sold, & the premises used for shellmaking were let. The income tax, Schedule D, assessment on the co. for the year 1920-21 was based on the average of the whole of its profits, including those derived from shellmaking, for the preceding three years. On appeal against this assessment the co. contended that it had been carrying on two separate businesses, boiler-making & shellmaking, & that for the year 1920-21 it was only liable to assessment in respect of its boiler-making business on the average of its boiler-making profits for the three preceding years. The general comrs. found as a fact that the co. had carried on one business with two departments & not two businesses, & that it was accordingly liable to income tax, Schedule D., on the average of the whole of its profits including shell-making profits.—*HOWDEN BOILER & ARMAMENTS Co., LTD. v. 203. Trade at a standstill—No actual discontinuance of business—Application of three years average.—Applt. co. was incorporated in 1912 to purchase & acquire as a going concern the business of builders & contractors & constructional engineers theretofore carried on by a firm, & to carry on a similar business. During 1913 & the early part of 1914 it was engaged in completing old contracts entered into by the vendors, but although it sought to obtain contracts for itself, it was not able to do so. In 1914 applt. co.'s works were acquired by the War Office, & from Dec. 1914, until Feb. 1920, it had no works or plant. During this period no contracts were concluded or trading operations conducted, & apart from capital receipts no money was received, but the co. persisted in its efforts to obtain contracts through its managing director. Throughout its existence applt. co. retained its registered office & held its statutory meetings year by year. The directors' fees & the secretary's salary were paid, & small general office expenses were incurred, & payments were made on account of travelling expenses of the directors & legal expenses & experts' fees in connection with negotiations for contracts. In 1920 the shares were acquired by other shareholders & new directors were appointed, works were acquired & contracts were obtained & substantial profits made for the year ending Apr. 5, 1922, in respect of which applt. co. was assessed to income tax under Schedule D. on the basis that a trade had been set up & commenced in 1920 within the meaning of Rule 1 (2) or Rule 8 (1) of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. Applt. co. contended that its trade had never been discontinued & consequently had not been "set up or commenced" in 1920 & that therefore the assessment should be made on the basis of the average profits of three years as provided in Schedule D., Rule applicable to Case I.:—Held: applt. co. had continued to carry on a trade or business & no trade or business had been set up or commenced in 1920, & the assessment should be made upon the basis of the three years' average.—

p. Trade set up within a year—Assessment for year proportionate to period of trading for that year.—Applt. co. was incorporated on Apr. 1, 1918, but, for the purposes of the excess profits duty, it had been agreed that trading did not commence until the middle of May, 1918. The first accounts were made up to Mar. 31, 1919, & the second accounts for the twelve months to Mar. 31, 1920. The co. appealed against an estimated assessment in respect of its profits under Schedule D. for the year 1919–20, & contended that, as complete accounts had been made up for its financial year preceding the year of assessment, viz. to Mar. 31, 1919, the tax for that year should be computed; (a) on the profits shown in such accounts; or, alternatively, if such accounts could not be regarded as covering a complete year's trading; (b) on the profits for twelve months proportionate to those for the actual period of trading to Mar. 31, 1919, as shown by the first accounts, without taking into consideration the profits arising in the year of assessment. The district court reduced the assessment to an amount arrived at by adding to the

204. Application of three years' average—Third year resulting in loss.—In Oct. 1924, applicants, a trading co., were assessed to income tax by the General Comrs. for the year ending Apr. 5, 1925, under Schedule D., Case I., on an amount computed on their average profits for the three preceding years. At the time the assessment was made it was impossible for applicants to ascertain whether there would be a balance of profits for the year in question, & no notice of appeal against the assessment was given. After the time for appealing had expired, applicants alleged that they had ascertained that during the year of assessment their business had resulted in a loss, whereupon, claiming that they were not liable to be assessed at all, they obtained a rule for a writ to prohibit the General Comrs. from making, allowing, confirming, enforcing, or otherwise proceeding upon the assessment:—Held: prohibition would not lie to the General Comrs., who had acted in accordance with their statutory duty in making the assessment & had not exceeded their jurisdiction.—R. v. q. Deductions in respect of money paid on guarantee.—Applt. was a sugar manufacturer & farmer & a shareholder in a limited liability co. From time to time he guaranteed advances made to the co. by a bank obtaining no gain or payment from the co. in return for such guarantee. Thereafter the co. went into liquidation & applt. paid to the bank, under his guarantee a sum of money exceeding the total income derived by him during the period of assessment for income tax from his occupation as a sugar manufacturer & farmer:—Held: applt.'s transaction in relation to the co. did not amount to the carrying on of a trade, & he was not entitled to deduct the loss in respect of these transactions from his income as a sugar manufacturer & farmer.—PLATT v. PART V. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 5.—A.

r. Effect of reduction of capital.—Income Tax Act, 1903, s. 9, has not the effect of rendering taxable as income profits of a co. which would not be income in the ordinary sense of that term. The fact of the reduction of the capital of a co. is not by itself decisive of the question of what are the profits of the co. for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts.—WEBB v. t. Profits applied in making reserve fund for depreciation, etc.—A co. treated all its moneys, including shareholders' capital & borrowed money, as one common fund, but excluded accumulated stocks of metal until sold. From this fund all payments were made without being appropriated to any particular source. In 1903 the co. sold a large accumulation of metal & applied the money in making up a reserve fund for depreciation & in adding to fixed capital & in paying off debentures & deposits:—Held: the co. was liable to pay income tax in respect of all the money applied by them for the above-mentioned purposes.—DAVIDSON v. 207. Application of three years' average—Large profits earned in last year of existence—Property expropriated by government.]—On Nov. 2, 1895, the South African Republic granted H. a concession for the construction of a railway & the South African Republic guaranteed to a co. which was formed to take over the railway interest at 4 per cent. on its share capital. On Oct. 11, 1899, war having broken out, the line was seized & worked by the British military authorities until the end of the war. On Feb. 18, 1902, the British Govt. gave notice to expropriate the railway under the terms of the concession. They recognised the validity of the concession, & admitted liability to pay all arrears of interest. They paid £97,506 16s. 11d. as guaranteed interest on share capital at 4 per cent. per annum from Jan. 1, 1899, to Nov. 14, 1903, in addition to the other payments on the expropriation:—Held: the £97,506 16s. 11d. was not part of a sum paid by the British Govt. as the price of the co.'s undertaking; it must be treated as the gross revenue of the co. earned as a trading co. from Jan. 1, 1901, to Nov. 14, 1903, & after deducting certain expenses incurred by the co. during the same period the benefit of the three years' average must be applied, & income tax was payable on one third of the balance only.—*PRETORIA-PIETERSBERG RY. show in respect of a particular year any sum brought forward from the preceding year or carried forward to the succeeding year, but showed a sum of profit or loss confined to the current year & as a balance transferred to another account called an appropriation account. The latter account showed the amount of accumulated profits brought forward from the preceding year, the amount paid as dividend & the amount carried forward to the succeeding year. For the year ending June 30, 1915, the dividend was larger than the amount of profit transferred from the so-called profit & loss account:—Held: the amount appearing in the appropriation account for that year as accumulated profits brought forward from the preceding year was an amount carried forward to the credit of the profit & loss account & was not to be deemed to be accumulated income.—MEARES v. ACTING FEDERAL COMR. OF TAXATION (1917), 23 C. L. R. 358.—AUS.

b. Increased value of assets appropriated for issue of debenture stock.]—A co. on a revaluation made in Nov. 1914, ascertained that the value of its assets on June 30, 1914, exceeded by £100,000, the amount at which those assets stood in the balance sheet for the half year ending on that date. No part of the increase in value appeared in any account or balance sheet of the co. before July 1, 1914. The increased value of the assets was appropriated for the purpose of providing for the issue of debenture-stock to its shareholders. Applt. was assessed to income tax in respect of debenture stock received by him as a shareholder in the co.:—Held: the £100,000 was undistributed income of the co. accumulated prior to July 1, 1914, & applt. was not liable to income tax in respect of such debenture-stock.—FORREST v. FEDERAL COMR. OF TAXATION (1921), 29 C. L. R. 441.—AUS.

c. Dividends paid to foreign shareholders.]—Dividends paid to foreign shareholders out of an incorporated co. having its head office in Ontario are "income" within Assessment Act, 1914 (c. 195). A co., although it sends dividends by post to the foreign shareholders, is not "an agent, trustee or person" who collects or receives or is in possession or control of income for or on behalf of the foreign shareholders & so is not assessable in respect of such income under sect. 13 (1) of the Act.—Re GAMBIE & ROBINSON & SAULT STE. MARIE (CITY) (1923), 54 O. L. R. 93.—CAN.

d. Allowances—In respect of mortgage tax, etc.]—In arriving at the income tax payable by a co.:—Held: an allowance from its income must be made in respect of so much of it was derived from the sum upon which it paid mtge. tax, & from the sum upon which the debenture-holders paid mtge. tax, & a further reduction must be made in respect of so much of the capital of the co. as was represented by that which was exempt from land tax.—WELLINGTON & MANAWATU RY. Co., LTD. v. TAXES COMR. (1893), 11 N. Z. L. R. 618.—N.Z.

e. Company granting temporary advances.]—A co. in the course of a wool-partnership.]—An ordinary partnership, carrying on business under the style of "The R. Coal Co.," having worked certain coal mines for a period of more than five years prior & up to Dec. 25, 1875, on that day formed themselves into & became incorporated as a limited co. called "The R. Coal Co., Ltd.," for the purpose of taking over & carrying on the business of the partnership, the assets of which, subject to its liabilities, were sold to the co. by the partners, who became holders of all the shares in the co. according & in proportion to their respective shares & interests in the partnership. Subsequently to Aug. 3, 1876, changes took place in the shareholders of the co., the shares having been bought & sold. The Income Tax Comrs. having assessed the co. to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D., for the year 1876 ending Apr. 5, 1877, on an average of profits for the five preceding years, the latter appealed, contending that they were liable only on a computation for one year on an average of profits from Dec. 21, 1875, the date of their incorporation. The Comrs. thereupon stated a case for the opinion of the ct., in which it was found that "the profits & gains of applt.' business had fallen short since Dec. 21, 1875, from the following specific cause, viz. the extraordinary depression of the iron & coal trades, whereby applt. were unable to sell either so large a quantity of their coal as they had previously been enabled to do, or to obtain anything like so good a price for their coals"; & figures were added to the finding, from which it appeared that the profits from Dec. 1875, to Dec. 1876, were less by more than one-half than they were in the previous year:—Held: (1) the principle on which the comrs. had acted in assessing applt. was fundamentally erroneous, & the assessment on an average of five years wrong in toto: (2) as it had not been shown that the account required by Schedule A., Nos. II. & III., could not be made out "by reason of applt.' possession or interest in the concern having broking business granted temporary advances on security of second mtges. or on wool & produce, the advances fluctuating in amount as the produce is realised:—Held: the co. was assessable on the balance of profit & not in respect of the full amounts remitted.—*SMILES (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) v. g. Succession—Question of fact.]—A co. took over the business of a firm of whiskey distillers, blenders, etc. For some years previously the firm had not worked any distillery. The co. worked a distillery, & its accounts for about fourteen months from its formation included the results of the business carried on at such distillery as well as those of the business carried on elsewhere. The general comrs. being of opinion that the concern carried on by the co. was not a succession to the concern carried on by the firm, assessed the co. on the average of the profits of the fourteen months:—Held: the question as to the identity of the two concerns was one of fact & not of law, & there was nothing to show commenced within the time for which the account is directed to be made out," applts. were not within Schedule A., No. IV., r. 6, & consequently were not thereby exempted from making out the five years' account; (3) applts.' business was a "trade or concern" within, & chargeable to duty under, Schedule D., Case I., r. 1, & turning the partnership into a limited co. did not make the business a "new trade or concern" or bring it within the proviso of that rule as a trade "set up & commenced within three years"; (4) applts. were a new assocn. carrying on an old trade previously carried on by the partnership, & had "succeeded" thereto within Schedule D., Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., r. 4, but that, the profits having fallen off from a "specific cause," which the cause stated by the case was held to be, applts. came within the exception at the end of that rule, & the five years' average did not apply; (5) the rule in Case VI. under Schedule D. was applicable to applts.' case as one not exactly hit by any other rule or schedule, & under that rule, the computation should be made on the full value of the profits for the current year; i.e. the year following the last assessment of the old firm up to the next assessment of the new co.—*RYHOPE COAL CO. v. h. — — —.] — Applts., an old-established firm of timber importers & saw-millers, being in need of further premises, purchased a saw-mill in the same town from a firm who carried on a joinery business there, & transferred thither the direction of their own business. Owing to trade depression all work in the joinery business had ceased, & there were no current orders at the date of acquisition. Applts. took over no books, no list of customers, no debts & none of the vending firm's staff, except a few workpeople, nor could they identify any orders received since the purchase as coming from former customers of that firm. The purchase price was fixed by reference only to the value of the tangible assets, including the land, but, by the express terms of the agreement for sale, it was taken to cover the goodwill of the joinery business which was also to be transferred, & in a joint circular issued to the public by the two firms applts. were described as the successors of the joinery firm, & announced their intention of carrying on that business in addition to their original trade:—Held: the question whether or not there was in any particular case a succession was a question of fact; the special comrs. of income tax were entitled to hold that applts. had succeeded to the trade of the joinery firm, & the comrs. were not debarred from confirming the assessments made upon applts. because the latter were unable to obtain particulars of the vendors' profits so as to verify such assessments.—THOMSON & BALFOUR v. LE PAGE (1923), 8 Tax Cas. 541.—SCOT.

To meet the demands of customers for general castings, the co., in Oct. 1920, acquired from another co. a foundry at H., & had, since Nov. 1, 1920, carried on the manufacture of general castings there. The subjects acquired included the goodwill of the business, but applt. co. neither sought, nor in fact received, orders from the former customers of the vending co., agreeing even that the principal shareholder in that co. should be free to canvass such customers on behalf of another concern. The books of the vending co. & the casting patterns held were not in fact transferred. The whole of the working staff at the H. foundry was retained by applt. co., but the entire management & administration was transferred to M. Assessments to income tax were made upon applt. co. for the years 1921–22 & 1922–23 on the combined average profits of the two foundries for the three years preceding the respective years of assessment, on the footing that it had succeeded to the business formerly carried on at the H. foundry. The co. contended that there was no succession, but that the business it carried on at the H. foundry was merely an extension of its business at M. The special comrs. held that there

210. Business in existence ten months only.]—A firm began a new business on Mar. 1, 1919, & prepared their first account for the ten months from Mar. 1, to Dec. 31, 1919. They sold their business as from Jan. 1, 1920, to a co., which decided to make up its accounts annually to Mar. 31 in each year. An account was made up for the three months from Jan. 1 to Mar. 31, 1920. It was admitted that the assessment to income tax for the financial year ending Apr. 5, 1920, ought to be apportioned between the firm & the co.:—Held: the liability to income tax for that year, upon the construction of Schedule D., Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., r. 1 (2), must be based on the account for the ten months' period from Mar. 1 to Dec. 31, 1919, & the three months' period from Jan. 1 to Mar. 31, 1920, must not be taken into consideration as, where the three years' period for calculating the average is not applicable, the period antecedent to the year of assessment must be the period over which the average is calculated.—*BETTS v. Bank purchasing business of another bank—Branch established at premises of purchased bank—No separate profits shown.]—Resps., a bank with a large capital, whose head office was in London, & having numerous branches in England & Wales, purchased in 1899 the business & premises & other assets of the County of Stafford Bank, which had a comparatively small capital, & carried on business only at Wolverhampton. Resps. then for the first time opened a branch at that place upon the premises so purchased, & there carried on business with the manager & staff previously employed by the County of Stafford Bank. The profits & expenses of the business so carried on at Wolverhampton by resps. were merged in those of their concern as a whole, & there were no means of ascertaining whether there were any profits, or the proportion of increase or decrease, if any, in the profits of resps.' bank,

The profits of the trading year ending Oct. 31, 1922, were less than the amount of the said assessment, & the co. claimed on adjustment of the assessment. The aggregate profits since the succession for the 3½ years to Oct. 1922, however, exceeded the aggregate assessments for that period, & also exceeded the aggregate profits for the 3½ years immediately preceding the succession, & the special comrs. decided that the profits had not fallen short since, or by reason of, the change, & confirmed the assessment:—Held: the profits of the co. had not fallen short so as to entitle it to an adjustment of the 1922–23 assessment.—*FISHER (J.) & SONS, LTD. v. In the three years respectively subsequent to 1899, resp., in computing the average of their profits under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 85), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I., rule 1, did not include any profits earned by the County of Stafford Bank. Additional assessments were made upon them so as to include such profits, on the ground that there had been a succession by them to the business of the County of Stafford Bank within Schedule D., Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., r. 4:—Held: there had been such a succession, & the additional assessments were rightly made.—*BELL v. 212. Decrease of profits—How ascertained.—By Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D., r. 11, "If within the year of assessment or the period of average on which the assessment is to be based . . . any person succeeds to a trade . . . the tax payable in respect of . . . the person so succeeding shall be computed according to the profits . . . during the respective periods prescribed by this Act . . . unless . . . the person succeeding . . . prove to the satisfaction of the Comrs. that the profits . . . have fallen or will fall short from some specific cause . . . since such . . . succession took place, or by reason thereof":—Held: (1) in ascertaining whether there has been a decrease of profits within the above rule a comparison must be made, not between the assessment for the year of assessment & the profits for that year but between the assessable profits for the period since succession & the actual profits for that period; (2) where there has been a phenomenal trade depression affecting the individual, this amounts to evidence on which the General Comrs. of Income Tax may hold that there has been a specific cause within the rule.—*OWL MILL CO. m — Purchase of going concern—Allowance for wear & tear.—A limited co., A. co., incorporated in 1910 with the object of taking over the business of another limited co., B. co., purchased B. co.'s business as a going concern. A. co. was assessed as the person succeeding to the business of B. co. but objected to the assessment on the ground that the profits assessed were less than the unexhausted balance of the amount allowable by way of deduction for wear & tear to B. co. The Crown contended that the allowance of such balance must be regarded as personal to B. co., & this view was supported by the comrs. on appeal:—Held: the determination

217. — Salary & commission paid by father to sons.]—A firm, as reconstituted on Jan. 1, 1920, consisted of a father & two sons, who were entitled to the profits in equal third shares. For some years prior to that date, the father had been sole partner & had employed his two sons in the business, their remuneration consisting of salary, & in addition, a commission on the profits at a rate fixed orally at the beginning of each year. Prior to 1915 the rate of commission for each son was 5 per cent. of the profits, but this was increased to 10 per cent. each for the years 1915 to 1917 inclusive, & to 33½ per cent. each for the years 1918 & 1919, a breakdown in the father's health in June, 1918, throwing the entire responsibility of the business upon the elder son until the end of that year when the younger son returned from military service. In the accounts of the business the commissions paid to the sons were shown as appropriations of their father's profit. Both sons had special knowledge of the business, & the firm claimed that the whole of the remuneration paid to the sons by way of salary & commission should be allowed as a deduction in arriving at the profits of the years entering into the average for the purposes of the computation of the liability to income tax for the years 1919–20, 1920–21 & 1921–22 in respect of the business profits.

The Special Comrs. on appeal decided that the commission for the years 1918 & 1919 was not on a commercial footing, & that only up to 10 per cent., instead of the full 33½ per cent., could it be regarded as paid to the sons for services rendered as managers of the business, & as deductible in statutory authority on the question whether or not prohibition of intoxicants should be introduced, a brewery co. carrying on business in New Zealand expended money in printing & distributing anti-prohibition literature. The poll resulted in a small majority against prohibition. The co. sought to deduct the expenditure in the assessment of the income derived from their business for the purposes of Land & Income Tax Act, 1916, of New Zealand. By sect. 86 (1) (a) of that Act no deduction is to be made in respect of expenditure "not exclusively incurred in the production of the assessable income":—Held: the co. was not entitled to make the deduction having regard to sect. 86 (1) (a).—*WARD & CO., LTD. v. p. Subscriptions to trade association—For keeping up prices.—A co. claimed that levies paid to a trade assocn., of which they were members, should be allowed as a deduction in the computation of their liability under Schedule D. The objects of the assocn. were to raise & keep up prices

arriving at the profits of the business for income tax:—Held: the amount deductible in respect of the commission in question, as being money wholly & exclusively laid out for business purposes, was a question of fact, & that, as there was evidence upon which the Special Comrs. could properly come to their decision, the Ct. could not review it.—*STOTT & INGHAM v. 219. — Acting as gas undertakers—Expenses of lighting town—Whether deductible from profits of sale of surplus gas.]—By a local Act the duty was imposed upon resp. corpn. of lighting a town with gas, & the Act further provided that it should be lawful for resps., after lighting the town, to supply private customers with gas. Resps., from the supply of gas to private customers, earned profits, in which they were assessed to income tax. They claimed to deduct from these profits expenses incurred in lighting the town, as being money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of a trade, within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 38), s. 100, Sched. D., Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., r. 1:—Held: the lighting of the town & the supply of gas to private customers were separate & distinct operations; no trade was carried on until resps., after having lighted the town began to supply gas to private customers, & therefore the expenses incurred in lighting the town were not money laid out or expended for the purposes of a trade, & the deduction could not be allowed.—*DILLON v. The co.'s appeal was heard by the special comrs. of income tax who required the production of the assocn.'s accounts for the three years forming the basis of the co.'s assessment in order that it might be seen precisely how & to what extent the sums received by the assocn. had been expended. The co. did not produce these accounts, alleging that the said accounts were not in their possession or under their control. a. — For defraying expenses of Conciliation Board.]—A colliery co. paid annual levies to an assocn. of coal owners. Part of these levies was applied by the assocn. in defraying the expenses of the Conciliation Board (Scotland), in paying the subscriptions to the Mining Assocn. of Great Britain, & in experimenting with coal dust for the purpose of devising means to prevent explosions in mines, the experiments having been made at the request of the Home Secretary with a view to legislation:—Held: the levies, so far as they were applied to meeting Conciliation Board expenses, constituted a good deduction, but so far as applied to the other two purposes they were not a good deduction.—*LOCHGELLY IRON & COAL CO., LTD. v. a. Grazing business—Land tax.]—Land tax paid by a person who carries on the business of a grazier, in respect of land in Victoria on which he carries on that business, is an "outgoing actually incurred by" him "in production of income" & is also a "disbursement" of "money wholly & for lease of coal mines for a term of years from Mar. 1874, the lessees agreed to pay a dead rent for the mines, & royalties at specified rates per ton on all coal worked; the dead rent to be recoupable out of royalties during the first sixteen years of the term, the effect being, that the lessor received on account of his share of the profits of the concern not less than a fixed annual sum, so that when his share of the royalties did not amount to the fixed sum he received that sum; but when his share of the royalties exceeded the fixed sum he received that sum only until the lessees had been reimbursed the excess paid to the lessor when his share of the royalties did not amount to the fixed sum. The lessees worked the mines for the first time in Oct. 1880, having paid the dead rent, less income tax, to the lessor up to that year. Upon an assessment to the income tax, made upon the lessees under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D. for the year 1881–2, it appeared that the lessor's share of the royalties for that year had exceeded the dead rent by the sum of £1,477:—Held: in estimating the profits of the concern for the particular year for the purpose of being assessed under Income Tax Acts, the lessees were not entitled to deduct the £1,477 from their gross profits.—*BROUGHTON COAL CO. v. b. Sum paid to underwriters—On issue of preference shares.]—Appls. claimed to deduct from the income on which they had been assessed a sum paid to underwriters on an issue of preference shares on the ground that it was "expenditure incurred for making profits in their business" within Indian Income Tax Act, 1918. 223. Subscriptions to trade association — For mutual assistance in strikes.]—The owners of a colliery were subscribers to a coal owners' association, which indemnified its subscribers against losses occasioned by strikes. In returning the profits of the colliery for income tax purposes they claimed to deduct the yearly average excess of their contributions over the amounts received by them as indemnities:—Held: the money sought to be deducted was not money wholly & exclusively laid out for the purposes of trade, & therefore the deduction could not be allowed.—RHYMNEY IRON CO. v. 224. — For keeping up prices — Expenses & payments to trade pool of profits.]—Appls., who were manufacturers of steel hoops, were, with two other firms who carried on similar businesses, members of an assocn., called the Steel Hoop Manufacturers' Assocn., which was formed for the purpose of keeping up prices & thus enabling its members to earn larger profits by agreeing to adhere to fixed prices & thereby preventing competition among themselves. By the rules of the assocn. each of the firms was entitled to a fixed percentage of the total orders; the books of each firm showing the quantities of steel hoops invoiced were to be audited every six months, & an account was then to be made up showing the proportion due to each firm, & in the event of any firm having invoiced more than its proper percentage

it was to pay into a pool the sum of 10s. on each ton of the excess, which amount the assocn. distributed in due proportion amongst those firms who had invoiced less than their proportionate quantities. Appls., in arriving at the amount of the profits of their trade assessable to income tax, claimed to deduct the excess of the total payments made by them to the assocn. over the amounts received therefrom on an average of the three preceding years, such excess consisting of the excess of payments to the pool over the receipts therefrom, & payments towards the administration expenses of the association:—Held: the excess so paid by appls. was "money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of" their trade within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., r. 1, & therefore appls. were entitled to the deduction claimed.—GUEST, KEEN, NETTLEFOLDS, LTD. v. FOWLER, [1910] 1 K. B. 713; 79 L. J. K. B. 563; 102 L. A., No. III., there ought to be set against the lump sums not merely the sums annually expended by appls. in the maintenance, repair & decoration of the graves & monuments, but the capitalised value of the whole of the expenditure that appls. might be estimated to incur in discharging the obligations in perpetuity in respect of which the lump sums had been paid.—LONDON CEMETERY CO. v. period.]—A co. carrying on a business owned certain lands [freehold & leasehold] which were used exclusively for the purposes of the business. In an assessment made on the co. under Schedule D. of Income Tax Acts for the year ending Apr. 5, 1912, the annual value of the lands as represented by the Schedule A. assessment in each of the three previous years was deducted from the profits of each of the years before striking the average. The amount assessed under Schedule A. for the year of assessment was larger than in the previous years, & the co. claimed that the average profits for the three previous years should be ascertained without the deduction of the amount of the Schedule A. assessment in each of the years, & that from the amount of the average profits thus ascertained the amount of the Schedule A. assessment for the year of assessment should be deducted:—Held: the contention of the co. was erroneous & that the assessment had been made upon the right principle.—*GENERAL HYDRAULIC POWER CO., LTD. v. 231. "Premises occupied for the purpose of such trade"—Whether limited to premises occupied by person assessed—Tied houses owned by brewers.]—The provision of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Rules applicable to Case I., r. 3, which authorises a deduction, in estimating the balance of profits & gains of a trade, in respect of the expenditure on repairs of "premises occupied for the purpose of such trade," applies only to premises occupied by the person assessed for the purpose of his trade. Applts., a firm of brewers, in order to increase their trade, purchased licensed houses which they let to tenants who contracted to buy from them all the beer, wines, & spirits to be sold therein. By reason thereof applts.' profits had been materially increased. The repairs to these houses were executed & paid for by applts., & they claimed in arriving, for the purpose of the income tax, at the balance of the profits & gains of their trade to be entitled to a deduction in respect of the sum expended on those repairs:—Held: applts. were not entitled to any deduction in respect thereof.—*BRICKWOOD & Co. v. The action was settled in ct. by consent on an agreement by resps. to pay a mitigated penalty of £2,000, that sum to the costs of the Crown, all imputations on the moral culpability of resps. being withdrawn, & it being made clear to the public that resps. had not been taking part by connivance or consent in trading with the enemy, but had only been guilty of carelessness. Judgment in favour of the Crown was entered against resps. in the mitigated penalty of £2,000 to cover the costs of the Crown:—Held: the penalty was not a "loss connected with or arising out of" the trade or business within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Rules applicable to Case I., r. 3, & was therefore not a proper deduction in arriving at the profits of resps.' trade or business for the purpose of excess profits duty, which is calculated upon the same principle as income tax, subject to certain modifications contained in Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 49 (1), not material to the present case. The actions were settled by consent on an agreement by applts. to pay a penalty of £3,000, without costs upon terms that the record was withdrawn. Applts. incurred legal costs to the amount of £1,074 12s. 9d. in connection with these proceedings. They claimed that these sums of £3,000 & £1,074 12s. 7d. were proper deductions in arriving at profits for the purposes of excess profits duty. The special comrs. found that the penalty or loss of £3,000 & costs was incurred by applts. in the course of carrying on their trade, & was incidental thereto, & decided that the deductions were admissible. On appeal to the revenue judge this decision was reversed. On appeal:—Held: the penalty or loss of £3,000 & costs was not a "loss connected with or arising out of" the trade or business within 1842 Act, s. 100, Sched. D., Rules applicable to Case I., r. 3, & was therefore not a proper deduction in arriving at the profits of resps.' trade or business for the purpose of excess profits duty, which was calculated upon the same principle as income tax subject to certain modifications contained in Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 49 (1), not material to the present case. The transferees retained the manager's services for a short time & then paid him a gross sum in commutation of his salary. They claimed to deduct that sum in estimating their profits for income tax:—Held: the agreement to pay the commutation money was in fact part of the consideration for the transfer of the business, the payment was therefore a “sum employed as capital” & could not be deducted.—*ROYAL INSURANCE CO. v. 250. Loss of loans to subsidiary company.]—Appls. carried on the business of zinc smelting, for which they required large quantities of blende, sulphide of zinc. To supplement their own supply they formed a new co. for acquiring & working in the interests of applts. certain mines reported to contain blende. They owned practically the whole of the shares of the new co. & from time to time they advanced to the new co. money by way of loan at interest for the working of the mines, the later advances being reported as being made against blende, to be delivered. Some blende was delivered, but, after deducting its value, a large balance remained due to applts. The new co. went into liquidation & applts. lost the whole of this balance, no part of which had been made up of advances against specific parcels of ore. In estimating their yearly profits & gains from their business for assessment to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D. they claimed to deduct this balance as a bad debt:—Held: these advances were an investment in a separate concern & a capital expenditure, & not money laid out exclusively for the purpose of the trade or advanced against specific parcels of goods to be delivered, & applts. were not entitled to the deduction.—*ENGLISH CROWN SPELTER CO., LTD. v. l. Expenses of promoting Bills in Parliament.]—In consequence of the unsatisfactory nature of the facilities given by a railway co., a firm of coal masters joined with other traders in promoting two Bills in Parliament for the construction of a railway line, & engineering works at Barrow-in-Furness were approached by a channel which was open to all shipping & which it was the duty of the harbour authority to maintain. Subsequent to resps. commencing business there in 1896 the harbour authority so neglected the maintenance of the channel that it began to silt up, & by gradual accretions it became much narrower & shallower so that it was no longer possible for vessels which could with safety get from & into resps. works in 1896 to continue to do so. A complete restoration of the channel to its original condition would have cost about £300,000, which sum the harbour authority found it impossible to provide in order to perform their admitted obligation, whereupon resps. & the harbour authority agreed to complete a lesser & cheaper scheme which would make the channel sufficiently navigable. This involved the dredging of the channel to a depth of 2 feet 6 inches instead of the 9 feet at low water at which it was in 1896, & to make this practicable a deep water berth was placed at some distance from the bar to enable vessels to rest there & cross the bar at high water on the following tide. This work, which was carried out in 1912, was paid for by resps. & the harbour authority, & the latter undertook its future maintenance. If this expenditure had not been incurred it would have been impossible for resps. to deliver a British battle cruiser then near completion at their works, & the expenditure enabled resps. to earn the profits upon which they were assessed to income tax. Resps. claimed to deduct the amount expended by them in respect of the dredging & the construction of the deep water berth from their gross profits before ascertaining their taxable profits for 1912 under Income Tax Acts:—Held: the expenditure was capital expenditure & therefore resps. were not entitled to deduct it from their gross profits before ascertaining their taxable profits.

It was said that expenditure might be income expenditure although the work on which it was incurred endured beyond the year in which it was made. I do not differ from that altogether, but it does seem to me that the question must always be one of fact whether a particular expenditure can be put against particular work, or whether it must be regarded as enduring expenditure & as serving the business as a whole (ROWLATT, J.).—OUNSWORTH v. VICKERS, LTD., [1915] 3 K. B. 267; 84 L. J. K. B. 2036; 113 L. T. 865; 31 T. L. R. 530; 6 Tax Cas. 671.

252. Shipbuilding contract—Payment on account of price—Further payment to be released from contract.—A limited co. had as its objects to purchase & manage a steamship, to acquire or manage any other ship, to carry on the trade or business of a steamship owner & carrier, & to employ each of its ships in carrying goods, passengers & other things; & in pursuance of these objects the co. purchased a steamship. By an agreement made in Dec. 1919, between a firm of shipbuilders & the representatives of the co. the former undertook to build & sell & the latter to buy a steamship for £226,000, of which a first instalment of £30,000 was to be paid on the signing of the agreement, & the balance in the instalments therein mentioned. The co. paid the first instalment & the work was proceeded with, but before any substantial progress had been made the co. found that the cost of the vessel was so great that it could only be worked at a loss. In Jan. 1921, an agreement was therefore made between the co. & the shipbuilders, & was afterwards carried out, by which, in consideration of the co. paying the builders £60,000 to include the £30,000 already paid, the shipbuilding agreement was cancelled:—Held: in assessing the annual profits & gains of the co.'s business to income tax for the material year under the 1918 Act, no deduction should be allowed in respect of the payment of £60,000 or any part of it, inasmuch as that payment was a capital expenditure & not a business expenditure for the purpose of earning profits.—*COUNTESS WARWICK S.S. 254. Limited to trading debts—Whether debt of managing director to company included.]—Resp. co. was incorporated in June, 1891. Until his death on Feb. 4, 1919, the business of resp. co. was managed by J. who was managing director & in sole control of it. From the evidence before the General Comrs. it appeared that no minute book had been kept with records of board meetings or general meetings of the co. There were no auditors & an almost entire absence of balance sheets, & it appeared that J. was allowed great latitude in the management of the co. J. was until his death a large shareholder in resp. co. Since Nov. 10, 1919, the whole of the shares had been held by another co. After the death of J. accounts were prepared, from which it appeared that many cash payments had passed through the co.'s accounts, which did not refer to the co.'s business, but to the private affairs of J., while payments had been made into the co.'s account which appeared to belong not to it but to J. In the result, J. was brought out in debt to the co. as at Feb. 28, 1919, to the amount of £14,584. In the balance sheet of Feb. 28, 1919, there appeared as an asset the sum of £14,584 as a debt due to the co. by deceased J. When the accounts for the subsequent period were prepared it was found that this debt was valueless, & the account was properly written off as a bad debt. Resp. co. contended (a) that the amount in question was a trading debt; (b) that it was part of the business of the co. to lend money, & that by a course of which was intended to give them the necessary facilities & to make them independent of the railway co. The Bills were ultimately dropped by agreement, whereby the railway co. undertook to grant the desired facilities:—Held: the expenditure incurred by the firm in the promotion of the two Bills constituted a capital outlay & was inadmissible as a deduction in computing the firm's liability to income tax.—MOORE (A. G.) & Co. v. HARE (1914), 6 Tax Cas. 572.—SCOT.

m. Redemption of debentures.]—During the years 1909–1911, resp. co. raised by the issue of debentures £83,705, which was used for the purpose of capital expenditure. In 1917 the directors paid over from the profits of the year the sum of £21,410, to the trustees of the debenture holders, for the redemption of debentures:—Held: such profits did not rank as capital expenditure for the redemption allowance provided by Income Tax Act 41, 1917, s. 23, & were subject to dividend tax under sect. 38 of the conduct over a long period J. had borrowed the money from the co.; (c) that if the amount was regarded as a loan it was a commercial loan & not an investment; (d) that J. was an employee of the co. & that the amount should be treated as a defalcation & allowed as a deduction from the profits for income tax. The General Comrs. decided that the debt due by J. had arisen in the course of resp. co.'s trading & was a proper deduction for income tax purposes & they allowed resp. co.'s appeal against assessment:—Held: there was no evidence on which the Comrs. could so find. The debt in question was not a trading debt, & the Comrs. had to assess the profits not of resp. co. itself, but of its trade.—*CURTIS v. OLD-FIELD (J. & G.), LTD. (1925), 94 L. J. K. B. 655; 133 L. The co. duly received the annuity & paid over such balance accordingly. They claimed to deduct the balance from an assessment on them to the income tax under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), sched. In the course of its business the co. purchased in New York bonds, stocks, & other securities of American railroad & other cos. The value of the purchases exceeded the amount of resps.' available cash, & certain of the securities which were lying in New York they pledged to their bankers in New York in consideration of which the bankers allowed resps.' banking account in New York to be overdrawn. The amount of the overdraft fluctuated from time to time as resps. bought & sold securities & they were charged periodic interest at curren rates from day to day. In 1906 they opened a loan account, in addition to the overdraft, with their bankers, on which the bankers granted a loan not exceeding $200,000 for a period of six months at 6 per cent. When this loan fell due, it was renewed for a further period of six months, after which the loan account was terminated & the balance transferred to current account. The bank collected all the dividends & coupons upon the securities in their hands, paying the interest due to themselves out of the sums so collected, the difference or net amount being credited to resps. In the event of the dividends & coupons collected not equalling the amount of the interest payable in any month the interest was debited to the overdraft on the current account. Resps. in stating their profits for assessment for income tax deducted the amount of interest paid to the bankers, but this deduction was disallowed by the comrs. on the ground that the interest in question was interest on capital employed in the business of the co. & therefore could not properly be deducted from the profits of the business:—Held: the comrs. were wrong in their decision, for the money borrowed by resps. could not be treated as "capital" within Income Tax Acts; & the interest paid for the use of the money was an outgoing by means of which resps. procured the use of the thing by which they made a profit &, like any similar outgoing, should be deducted from the receipts to ascertain the taxable profits & gains which were earned by them.—*FARMER v. 260. Annuities granted by company in course of business—Deemed to be paid out of income of investments—Deduction of annuities less retained income tax.—(1) The business of a co. included the purchase of reversions, the lending of money on the security of reversions, & the sale of annuities. The annuities were payable out of the co.'s general assets. The co. when paying the annuities deducted income tax & retained it for their own use. Their revenue was derived in part from investments from which they received dividends less income tax. In order to arrive at their assessable profits they deducted the full untaxed amount of the annuities from their gross receipts. From the balance so arrived at they deducted the dividends on their investments. They then deducted certain expenses of management, & contended that the final balance represented their assessable profits:—Held: the co. must be taken to have paid the annuities out of the income they received from investments, &, apart from expenses of management, they could deduct from their profits not the full amount of their dividends but only that amount less the amount of the annuities.

(2) As part of their expenses of management during a certain year the co. had deducted from their profits the cost of an annuity to an amount equal to the retiring allowance of one of their officers, describing the sum deducted as capital cost of retiring allowance. The retiring allowance had always been treated as an admissible deduction:—Held: the sum expended in purchasing the annuity was an equally admissible deduction.—*HANCOCK v. 261. Cesser of royalties during three years average—Method of computation.—Previously to Jan. 1, 1907, applts. had paid royalties for the use of certain patents which in consequence of arrangements made between applts. & the owners of the patents ceased to be payable after that date. The question was how the trade profits of applts. during the year 1907 to 1908 ought to be estimated, having regard to Finance Act, 1907 (c. 13), s. 25 (1):—Held: the operation of the first part of the sub-sect. was dependent upon that of the latter part, & that, inasmuch as the latter part could have no operation under the circumstances, the applts. were in the same position as before the enactment, & were therefore entitled to deduct the royalties paid by them during the three years of average for the purpose of estimating their profits during the year of assessment.—*LANSTON MONOTYPE CORPN., LTD. v. in another concern.—A. co. made an agreement with B. co. carrying on a similar business, whereby it obtained, in return for an undertaking to make up the yearly profits of B. co. to a certain amount, a commanding interest in its management. A. co. claimed to deduct, in computing its yearly profits for income tax purposes, a payment made to B. co. under the terms of this agreement. The district comrs. of taxes found that the payment was made by A. co. for the purpose of its trade & that it might sell its goods at a better price & allowed the deduction:—Held: the question was one of fact rather than of law & the deduction had rightly been allowed.—*MOORE v. PART V. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 7.—H.

a. Cesser of royalties after three years of average—Method of computation.—Applts. were assessable to income tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1918, on the average amount of their business profits for the three years ended on Dec. 31, 1916. During each of the calendar years 1914, 1915 & 1916 applts. had paid a fixed royalty of £400 in respect of the user of a patent. The royalty ceased to be payable after the year 1916 & the payment in respect of that year was made on Jan. 1, 1916. No deduction had been allowed on account of the patent royalty paid in the respective years 1914, 1915 & 1916 in arriving at the amount of applts.' business profits liable to assessment to income tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1918. Applts. contended that, inasmuch as the royalty had ceased to be payable after the year 1916, they were not able thereafter to recover by deduction from the royalty owner the income tax applicable to the royalty, & that the actual sums paid as royalty in the years 1914, 1915 & 1916 should be deducted before arriving at the average profit upon which the assessment to income tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1918, was based:—Held: applts. had been correctly assessed to income tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1918, & no deduction in respect of the £400 paid annually as royalty in the three years, 1914, 1915 & 1916 was admissible in computing applts.' profits for the purposes of the assessment.—*BOYD (JAMES) & SONS v. 262. Retiring gratuity.]—Resps., the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England & Wales, were a limited co. incorporated under Cos. Act, 1867 (c. 131), s. 23, with no power to pay any portion of their earnings to their members by way of profits. In 1911 resps. gave a gratuity of £1,500 to one of their reporting staff on his retirement after long service. The payment was not made under any contract between resps. & the reporter, but it was within the powers conferred by resp.'s memorandum & articles of association, & it was the habit of resps. to give gratuities to reporters on retirement after long service. The £1,500 was included in resps. trading accounts for 1911 as an item of expenditure, & an additional assessment to income tax under Schedule D. was in consequence made on resps. of £500, i.e., one-third of £1,500, in respect of their profits for that year. On appeal by resps. to the comrs., they held that the £1,500 was allowable to resps. as a business expense in calculating the profits of the year for income tax purposes. On a case stated by the comrs.:—Held: the question whether the £1,500 could be deducted from resps.' profits as being "money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes" of resps.' business, within rule 1 applying to first & second cases in Schedule D., was a question of fact for the comrs., & as there was evidence to support their finding of fact, their decision was final.—SMITH v. D., applts. were not entitled to deduct this sum of £31,784 in the year in which the contribution was made.—BRITISH INSULATED & HELSBY CABLES v. ATHERTON, [1926] A. C. 205; 95 L. J. K. B. 336; 134 L. T. 289; 42 T. L. The co. having claimed that the £50,000 ought to be deducted from the profits of the year for the purpose of computing the firm's assessment to income tax:—Held: the fund so created not being money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the co.'s trade or business, but being money withdrawn from the business & devoted to charitable purposes could not be deducted from the co.'s profits, for the purpose of ascertaining the income tax payable.—ROWNTREE & CO. v. 266. Whether allowed—Annual sum set aside for depreciation.]—A co. carrying on business as ironfounders set apart, in accordance with their articles of association, a sum of money from their net profits for depreciation of buildings, fixed plant, & machinery, & claimed, in making a return under Schedule D. of their annual profits or gains, to deduct this amount:—Held: such a deduction was contrary to Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Rules applicable to Case I., r. 1, as the amount set aside was in effect an addition to capital.—FORDER v. b. "By reason of wear & tear"—*Removal of silt by dredging.]—*The expenditure by a harbour board of a sum on removing, by dredging, the silt which had accumulated in the harbour is not an expenditure for the purpose of making good "wear & tear of plant" & does not fall to be allowed as a deduction.—DUMBARTON HARBOUR REVENUE.

c. Amount of depreciation—How calculated—*Ships.]—*A co. owned a fleet of passenger & cargo steamers. In assessing the co. to income tax, the comrs. for general purposes allowed a deduction of 5½ per cent. from the written down value of the whole fleet in the co.'s books, as representing the diminished value of the ships by reason of wear & tear during the year of assessment. The co. claimed a reduction of the assessment, on the ground of overcharge consequent upon insufficient allowance for depreciation:—Held: the appeal must be refused.—LEITH, HULL, & HAMBURG STEAM PACKET CO. v. *Banking company—Comparison of market rates with book valuations of securities.]—*A banking concern was assessed to income tax on profits amounting to Rs. 1,254,130, but claimed to deduct therefrom a sum of Rs. 298,000 which represented depreciation on securities, arrived at by comparing the market rates with the valuations in the books of the bank:—Held: the deduction claimed could not be allowed.—RE TATA INDUSTRIAL BANK, LTD. (1921), 1 L. e. Covered by amount allowed

267. "Plant"—Hulk used for coal storage.]—A firm of shipowners owned a fleet of vessels of the average age of thirty-one years. Prior to the year of assessment there had been allowed yearly from the gross profits assessed to Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D. an amount by way of deduction for diminished value by reason of wear & tear, & sums amounting in the aggregate to 96 per cent. on the first or prime cost of the vessels, including such sums as had been expended upon them by way of addition or repairs other than ordinary annual repairs, had been allowed: the existing, or breaking-up, value of the vessels during the year of assessment was more than 4 per cent. of the first or prime cost. There was no agreement between the shipowners & the comrs. that the allowance for depreciation should be calculated on the basis of its being an allowance which would at the end of a period of years, taking into account the breaking-up value of the vessels, replace the shipowners' capital, & that after that date no further allowance should be made:—Held: (1) the comrs. were bound under Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (c. 15), s. 12 to consider to what extent there had been a diminution of value by reason of wear & tear during the year of assessment & to decide what was a just & reasonable allowance to make in respect of such depreciation, & they were not entitled to take into account the allowances made in previous years; (2) a hulk, which had formerly been a sailing-ship, but which had been dismantled & had had its rudder removed & was used as a floating warehouse for coal, was "plant" within the meaning of the section.—HALL (JOHN) JUNIOR & Co. v. RICKMAN, [1906] 1 K. B. 311; 75 L. J. K. B. 178; 94 L. T. 224; 54 W. R. 380; 22 T. L. R. 131.

268. — Whether animal at a stud included—Stallion.]—Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (c. 15), s. 12, provides that in assessing the profits of a trade or concern in the nature of trade chargeable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D. comrs. shall allow a reasonable deduction as representing the diminished value by reason of wear & tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern:—Held: a stallion which earns fees for its owner, the proprietor of the business of a stud farm, by serving mares belonging to other persons is not "plant" within sect. 12, nor is the annual decrease in the value of the stallion due solely to the effluxion of time, a diminution in its value by reason of wear & tear within that sect.—DERBY (EARL) v. AYLMEER, [1915] 3 K. B. 374; 84 L. J. K. B. 2160; 113 L. T. 1005; 31 T. L. R. 528; 6 Tax Cas. 665.

1. — Loss of earning power of obsolete ship.]—A steamship co. claimed an allowance not only in respect of depreciation of its ship by wear & tear, but also in respect of (a) loss of earning power owing to the ship having become more or less obsolete, & diminution in market value apart from that caused by wear & tear:—Held: the district comrs. rightly rejected the claims under (a) & (b).—BURNLEY S.S. CO. v. AIKIN (1894), 3 Tax Cas. 275.—SCOT.

270. "Used for the purposes of the trade"—Plant leased to subsidiary company.]—A British co. transferred the foreign cold storage businesses carried on by it directly or through subsidiary cos. to an American co. for a term of years in consideration of certain annual payments to the subsidiary cos., whose shares it continued to own, receiving dividends therefrom, & of a guarantee of any sum necessary to meet its fixed charges & maintain its dividends. The premises, machinery & plant of the foreign businesses remained the property of the British co., but they were placed under the sole control of, & were used by, the American co. for the purpose of carrying on the businesses as it thought fit. The ownership of the premises, plant & machinery remained in applt. co., the American co. being under no obligation to insure the premises against loss by fire or to provide for wear & tear or depreciation of plant or machinery.

The British co. claimed that, in the computation of its profits for assessment to income tax under Schedule D. deductions should be allowed for the fire insurance premiums paid by it in respect of the premises, & for wear & tear of the machinery & plant, of the transferred businesses:—Held: the fire insurance premiums did not represent money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade of applt. co.; the machinery & plant in question was not used for those purposes, & the deductions claimed were accordingly inadmissible.—UNION COLD STORAGE CO., LTD. v. JONES (1923), 129 L. T. 512; 8 Tax Cas. 725.

271. Amount of depreciation—Question of fact for commissioners.]—Under Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (c. 15), s. 12, the comrs. allowed to applt. co., in respect of the diminished value of their fleet of ships by reason of wear & tear, a deduction which was less than that to which the co. claimed to be entitled. Upon a case stated the Q. B. Div. dismissed the appeal of the co. Upon a further statement made by the comrs., pursuant to a direction of the Ct. of Appeal, the appeal was dismissed upon the ground that no question of law arose.—*PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. 276. — Tramway—Renewed & reconstructed before worn out.]—Applts. purchased horse tramways, & both before & after the acquisition of the horse tramways by applts. it had been the practice in arriving at the amount of their assessment for the purposes of income tax, to make a deduction from the profits of the tramways of the sums actually expended in each year in renewing the worn out tramways & cars in lieu of making a deduction for diminished value of the tramways & cars by reason of wear & tear under Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (c. 15), s. 12. Applts., during the year of assessment, reconstructed thirty-eight miles of tramways for working by electric traction. Of this, five miles were quite worn out, the remainder having on an average a life of eight years unexhausted at the date of reconstruction. On the reconstruction three hundred & twenty-two cars, suitable only for horse traction, were discarded, but were not worn out. The comrs., in assessing the profits for the year of assessment, following the previous practice, allowed a deduction in respect of the five miles of tramway which were worn out, but refused to allow any deduction in respect of the other portion of the tramway reconstructed or of the cars which were not worn out:—Held: the profits of the old co. for the three years preceding the purchase. The amount of deductions for wear & tear to which the old co. was entitled during these three years had not been given effect to in full, owing to the fact that they exceeded the amount of the taxable income of the old co. during that time:—Held: the new co. was entitled to deduct from its taxable income the balance of the deductions allowable to the old co.—SCOTTISH SHIRE LINE, LTD. v. practice adopted in order to arrive at the deductions was one to which there was no objection, & was merely a mode of dealing with what was a question of fact for the comrs.; the comrs. had not gone wrong on a question of law; & the appeal only raised a question of fact.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. In 1902 an imperial tax called the profits tax, was imposed upon them for that year in the form of a 10 per cent. tax yearly upon the net produce of the individual year:—Held: in arriving at their assessment under Schedule D. the amount of the profits tax could only be allowed as an outgoing spread as an average over the three years & not as a deduction from the ascertained profits of the individual year.—STEVENS v. 279. Chargeable under Schedule D.—Effect of Revenue Act, 1866 (c. 36), s. 8.]—A rural district council under the powers conferred by Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), supplied water to a number of contributory places. To some of these places the water was supplied at a profit, & to others at a loss, to the council. In assessing the council under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 36), s. 60, Sched. A., No. III., in respect of the annual value or profits of waterworks, the surveyor of taxes took into account only those dealings which showed a profit, on the ground that the undertaking of supplying water was in respect of each contributory place a separate undertaking or concern:—Held: (1) on the facts, the undertaking of supplying water was in respect of each contributory place a separate concern, & the council must pay the tax in respect of each contributory place which made a profit; (2) Revenue Act, 1866 (c. 36), s. 8, does not constitute persons engaged in the concerns described in Schedule A., No. III., “persons carrying on concerns in the nature of trade the profits whereof are made chargeable under the rules of Schedule D.” within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 101, so as to entitle them under that sect. to set against the profits acquired in one or more of those concerns the excess of the loss sustained in any of the other concerns over & above the profits thereof.—WAKEFIELD RURAL COUNCIL v. the Bank of England on behalf of the Comrs. of income tax before such payment. The London County Council also, under powers given them by various statutes, advanced sums of money by way of loan to certain public bodies from whom they received interest in full without deduction of income tax. The London County Council were held liable by the surveyor of taxes to pay income tax on such last aforesaid interest, & he assessed them under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), sched. D. On appeal to the Comrs., & subsequently to the Div. Ct., but not when before the surveyor, the London County Council contended that if they were so liable they were entitled to certain deductions in respect of income tax paid by them in other transactions:—Held: the London County Council were properly assessed & they were liable to pay income tax on the sums received by them in full without deduction of income tax by way of interest on loans made by them.

Insurance Co. an offer which provided for an allowance of a discount of 15 per cent. from the co.'s ordinary table of premiums. Subsequently, on May 8, 1895, a formal agreement was entered into between the insurance co. & the Civil Service Insurance Society, which had been established to mature & carry into effect the scheme initiated by the earlier assocn. which had only partially represented the Civil Service. The agreement contained a provision that the rate of premium for all insurances effected through the instrumentality of the society should be those contained in the insurance co.'s table of rates of

Sept. 15, 1890, less a discount of 15 per cent. The society on its part agreed to promote the business of the insurance co. & to make certain arrangements to facilitate the payment & collection of the premiums. The premium appearing on the face of the policies effected under the terms of the agreement had always been the gross premium & the endorsement on the back of the policy had shown the tabular premium, the amount of the discount & the net amount payable. In the insurance co.'s accounts the amount of the gross premium had been credited as a receipt & the discount had been treated as part of the insurance co.'s expenses, one half having been allocated to commission & the remainder to general expenses:—Held: the discount of 15 per cent. was not a sum disbursed by the insurance co. as “expenses of management (including commissions)” within Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 14 (1), & the co. was therefore not entitled to relief from income tax under that sect. in respect of the amount of the discount in question.—NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO. v. Appls., for the purpose of increasing their trade as brewers, were in the habit of buying the leases for terms of years of licensed public-houses, & letting such houses to publicans, who covenanted to buy of applts. all the beer sold therein; & to obtain these leases, applts. were obliged to pay large premiums & to covenant to pay fixed rents for the several terms of years respectively. In returning the year's profits of their trade for assessment to the income tax, applts. claimed an allowance, in respect of such premiums, equal to the proportion of them which had been exhausted by reason of one year of the several terms having run out; & they claimed to deduct that amount from the balance of their profits as capital exhausted in the trade:—Held: applts. were not entitled to the deduction, which was a claim, not in respect of expenses incurred in the production of the beer but, of money expended in order to promote its sale after its production.—WATNEY v. 285. Banking & money lending business combined with brewery—Losses on loans to brewery customers.]—Appls. carried on the business of brewers, & also, as a branch or adjunct of their brewery business, the business of bankers & money lenders, & in the course of such business lent money to their customers on security, & received money on deposit from their customers, who were allowed to draw bankers' cheques or orders on applts. In no case was any loan or advance made by way of permanent investment, but the same was taken only in connection with the current dealings & transactions of the customer with applts., & in the event of such current dealings or transactions terminating, the loan or advance was required to be paid off, & the account closed. The profits of the brewery were largely increased by the addition of the banking & money lending business, & the loans were necessary to enable applts. to realise profits. They claimed to deduct from an assessment to the income tax on profits from trade, bad debts in respect of loans to customers:—Held: on the facts above stated, applts. must be taken to have carried on one business only, the money advanced to customers was used in the business, & not capital invested, & applts. were entitled to the deduction claimed.—REID'S BREWERY CO. v. 286. Expenses incurred for the purposes of trade—Repairs to tied houses.]—BRICKWOOD & Co. v. REYNOLDS, No. 231, ante.

287. ———.]—Where money is paid by a landlord, being a brewer, or allowed by him to the tenant of a tied house, as a necessary incident of the profitable working of the brewery business, the landlord is not prevented from deducting that money, in his estimate of the balance of profits of his brewery business for the purposes of assessment to income tax, by reason of the fact that it enures also for the benefit of the tenant's separate trade in the tied house. A brewery co., as a necessary incident of the profitable working of their brewery business, acquired & owned licensed houses which they let to tied tenants, who, in consideration of the tie, paid a rent less than the full annual value. The tenants were under an agreement to repair & to pay rates & taxes, but the co. in fact did the repairs & paid the rates & taxes in order to avoid loss of tenants. The co. also in respect of these houses paid premiums on insurance against fire & loss of licenses & incurred legal expenses in connection with the renewal of the licenses & otherwise. All these sums were solely & exclusively expended or allowed by the brewery co. for the purposes of their business:—Held: in estimating the balance of the profits of their business for the purposes of assessment to income tax, the brewery co. were entitled to deduct all these sums as expenses necessarily incurred for the purpose of earning the profits.

The third rule under Case I., . . . goes to the quantum only. It assumes that money spent in repairs or for the other purposes mentioned would be a proper item of deduction, but provides that where the property on which the money is expended is occupied or employed for the purposes of the trade the amount allowed is to be calculated on an average, leaving the question as to what may properly be allowed where the property is not so occupied or employed entirely untouched (LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON).

If part of the trade consisted in letting houses or implements to be occupied or used otherwise than for the purposes of the trade, & it were necessary for the purposes of the trade to keep such houses or implements in repair, a deduction in respect of the money spent in repairs would be both proper & necessary in order to ascertain a balance of profits & gains, & such deduction, not for income tax on its whole income, except interests from bank deposits, under Schedule A. The co. claimed relief under Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 14 (1), in respect of sums disbursed by it as expenses of management. The relief claimed would have made the tax paid by the co. less than the tax which it would have paid if it had been charged in accordance with the rules of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I.:—Held: the co. was alternatively chargeable for income tax on the profits of its business, including the rents, under Schedule D., & the claim was excluded by proviso (a) of sect. 14 (1).—ROSYTH BUILDING & ESTATE CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE, [1921] S. C. 372.—SCOT.

—Resps., a firm of brewers, submitted accounts showing a certain sum for profits. In arriving at the amount they had deducted sums expended in connection with unsuccessful applications made by them to the licensing justices for new licenses to houses owned & leased by them, & also to houses not owned by them, but for which they conducted the application, for the purpose of increasing their trade:—Held: resps. were not entitled to make the deductions, as the expenses were not money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of their trade, but were a capital expenditure within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), sched. A customer sleeping in the inn was injured by the fall of a chimney, & recovered damages & costs against the co. for the injury, which was owing to the negligence of the co.'s servants:—Held: the damages & costs could not be deducted in estimating the balance of profits for the purpose of the income tax, the loss not being connected with or arising out of the trade, & not being money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade.

(2) It does not follow that if a loss is in any sense connected with the trade, it must always be allowed as a deduction, for it may be only remotely connected with the trade, or it may be connected with something else quite as much as or even more than with the trade. I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with the trade in the sense that they are really incidental to the trade itself. They cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader. The nature of the trade is to be considered. To give an illustration, losses sustained by a railway co. in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling might be deducted (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—STRONG & CO., LTD. v. WOODFIELD, [1906] A. 291. — Compensation levy imposed on tenants.]—A brewery co. as an essential part of their business acquired & held licensed houses which they let to tenants who covenanted to buy all their beer from the co. The sole purpose of the co. in thus acting was to increase the profits of their trade in manufacturing & selling beer wholesale. If any house lost its license the co. got rid of that house as soon as possible. The annual compensation levy imposed by Licensing Act, 1904 (c. 23), s. 3, was paid as to the co.'s share of the levy by the tenant paying that share & deducting it from his rent as provided by the Act. In estimating for income tax purposes the yearly profits of their trade, which were increased by their ownership of the houses, the co. claimed to make a deduction in respect of the sum which they were compelled to pay for the levy, & contended that the sum was wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of their trade within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, sched. Fire insurance company—Claim for deduction in respect of unearned premiums or unexpired risks—Method of computation.]—In making a return of their profits for assessment to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), sched. D., a fire insurance co. is not permitted by the Act to credit themselves with, or to claim a deduction for, a portion, calculated by them at 33 per cent., or one-third of the amount of premiums received during the given year, as the unearned or unexhausted portion of such premiums, although in respect of such portion the co. remain liable to losses which may occur in the ensuing year. The fair & proper mode of ascertaining the amount of net profits for the purposes of the Act, it being impossible to ascertain it with such strictly mathematical accuracy as to do perfect & absolute justice, is to take on the one side the whole receipts proportion of the general expenditure estimated by him as incurred in connection with the ownership & mortgaging of hotels:—Held: any expenditure which could be shown to have been reasonably incurred in dealing with the mortgages & ownership of land was not deductible.—TAXES

I think the particular correction sought by applts. in this case is indefensible upon the materials before us, & further, that the method adopted by the Comrs. is a good working rule in the present instance & generally. If in any particular case an insurance co. can show it works hardship, no doubt the rule ought to be modified so that the real gains & profits may be ascertained as near as may be (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—GENERAL ACCIDENT, FIRE & LIFE ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD. v. 295. ————.—There is no rule of law that in assessing a fire insurance co. to income tax the total premium receipts for the year, after deducting the losses & disbursements for the same period, are to be taken as the profits of the co., without making any allowance for unexpired risks on policies outstanding at the end of the year; but where it becomes necessary to have recourse to some form of estimate, that method will be adopted which approximates most nearly to the truth. Where, therefore, it was proved, on an appeal by a fire insurance co. against an assessment, that it was the practice of the co., in making up its annual accounts for the purpose of ascertaining the profits for distribution amongst its shareholders, to carry forward to the succeeding year a certain percentage of its premium receipts as an allowance to meet unexpired risks on outstanding policies, & that this percentage was a fair & reasonable allowance for that purpose, & the figures, on the triennial average prescribed by Income Tax Acts, showed a large increase in the amount of such allowance for the year of assessment:—Held: in the circumstances it was competent to the co. to make an allowance in respect of unexpired risks, & the increase in the allowance formed no part of the profits or gains of the year.—SUN INSURANCE OFFICE v. An account was annually taken, & the greater part of the surplus of such premiums over expenditure referable to these policies was returned to the policy holders as bonuses, either by addition to the sums insured or in reduction of future premiums. The remainder of the surplus was carried forward as funds in hand to the credit of the general body of the members. In making up the balance sheet showing the amount of its profits & gains for the purpose of assessment to income tax, under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), sched. D. the society deducted from its gross income the sum paid in discharge of its annuity contracts. Upon the assessment for the year 1885-6, & before the coming into operation of Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (c. 8), s. 24 (3):—Held: the society was not liable to be assessed in respect of the amount paid by it for annuities.—GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY

value of a policy is applied by a life assurance co. in payment of overdue premiums, & the moneys so applied, with interest thereon, become a charge on the money payable under the policy & the surrender value thereof, the interest so charged is income from an investment on which income tax is payable by the life assurance co.—*TAXES COMR. v. 303. — Foreign investments—Income received by foreign branch—Not remitted to United Kingdom.]—An insurance co. having its head office in England had branch offices in England & in some foreign countries, the business of which was conducted by managers appointed by & acting under the board of directors at the head office. The co. sought to have exempted from assessment to income tax (a) a sum of £5,502, being dividends upon various foreign securities, representing part of the profits made abroad, which, instead of being specifically remitted to this country, were re-invested in American securities for the purpose of forming a reserve fund for the business of the co. there, as required by the law of the United States; (b) a sum of £12,841, as being profits made at some of the foreign branches, which profits were not specifically brought or remitted to this country, but were retained abroad to effect reserves. The co. contended, as to both sums, that, as no part of the same had been actually remitted to or received in this country, they were not liable to assessment:—Held: both sums were part of the profits & gains of the business & were liable to assessment as such.—NORWICH UNION FIRE INSURANCE CO. v. h. — — — — —.]—A life insurance co. derived the bulk of its gross income from taxed sources. The amount of this taxed income exceeded the co.'s net profits. The co. received in addition certain interest from which tax was not deducted:—Held: this interest was property assessable under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. 303 i. — Foreign investments—Income received by foreign branch—Not remitted to United Kingdom.]—A Scottish mutual life assurance society lent out sums of money in Australia on interest. The interest accruing was not remitted to the United Kingdom in forma specifica, but was retained abroad & invested. It was, however, entered in the revenue account of the society as received:—Held: interest not received in the United Kingdom was not assessable to Income Tax, & the facts in these cases did not amount to constructive remittance.—FORBES (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) v. 303 ii. Where interest derived from the foreign & colonial investments of a proprietary insurance co. was not remitted home, but was retained in the countries where it was earned & was invested or otherwise applied there:—Held: by being entered in the co.'s accounts & taken into account in estimating the amount of profit to be divided by way of bonus, dividend, or Acts & had its head office here. One of the objects stated in its memorandum of assocn. was to invest money not immediately required in such manner as might from time to time be determined. By the laws of certain of the foreign States in which it carried on business an insurance co. was required, as a condition precedent to carrying on business there, to deposit with the Govts. of those countries certain sums of money & to invest those sums in accordance with the local laws. In pursuance of those requirements the co. invested certain sums in those States. It also voluntarily invested there other sums representing accumulated profits of the business. Both classes of investments yielded interest which was received by the co. abroad but was not remitted to the United Kingdom. This interest was included in the balance sheets of the co.:—Held: the income of the foreign investments formed part of the profits or gains of the co.'s business & was properly taxed under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. 305. — Method of assessment—At option of Crown—Whether under Case I. or Case IV.]—Where a receipt comes within more than one case in Schedule D., the Crown has an option under which Case it will assess the tax subject to the restriction that it must not tax it twice over.

The question is whether applt. co. in the first appeal can be charged under Case I. in Sched. D. in respect of the income of certain American & Canadian investments, or whether they can only be charged under Case IV. in respect of such moneys as are actually received in Great Britain. The general principle has been laid down in the Ct. of Session by Lord Dunedin in Revell v. Edinburgh Life Insurance Co. (1906), 5 Tax Cas. 221, . . . I feel no doubt that the Crown has an option to tax under Case I. or under Case IV., in any state of circumstances falling within that case (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.). — LIVERPOOL &

306. ——— Whether under Case I. or Cases IV. & V.]—A life assurance society, having been assessed for income tax on an income basis for the financial year 1914–15, brought an action against the A.-G. & the Board of Inland Revenue, alleging that by an agreement of 1912 the surveyor of taxes, acting on behalf of the Board, had agreed to assess them for the five years, 1911–12 to 1915–16, on a profit basis & at an agreed figure of profit based on the previous quinquennial valuation, & asking for a declaration that the agreement was binding, & an injunction to restrain the Board from enforcing the recent assessment:—Held: if the agreement had borne the construction alleged by the society, which the ct. did not accept, it would have been invalid, as the income tax was an annual tax imposed & assessed year by year, & neither the surveyor nor the Board could bind the Crown as to the basis or amount of assessment in future years. Qu.: (1) whether, having regard to the society's right of appeal to the General Comrs. under Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), s. 57, it would have been right to make a declaratory order against the A.-G.; (2) whether, having regard to their functions under Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (c. 21), s. 1, the Board were competent parties to an action of this nature.

Under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), the taxing authorities in assessing a life assurance society have an option to tax it under sect. 100, Sched. D., Case I., or Cases IV. & V., of that Act or both, providing that the co. is not taxed twice over in respect of the same income or the same moneys.—GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. A.-G., [1916] 1 Ch. 228; 85 L. J. Ch. 201; 114 L. T. 399; 32 T. L. R. 264; 7 Tax Cas. 36.

307. ——— Foreign company—Relief in respect of expenses of management.]—Applt. co. was a foreign co. carrying on a life insurance business in the United Kingdom, & was assessed to income tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1919, in accordance with Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 15 (1), in respect of the proportion of its income from the investments of its life assurance fund. It made a claim for relief in respect of a proportion of its expenses of management for the same year under Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 15 (3). This claim was opposed by the Crown, who contended that the claim should be restricted in accordance with proviso (a) to sect. 14 (1) of Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), which provides that relief shall not be given under this sect. so as to make the income tax paid by the co. less than the tax which would have been paid if the profits of the co. had been charged in accordance with Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. D., Rules applicable to Case I. It was contended on behalf of applt. co. that Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 15, prescribed a new & definite method of taxation for foreign life assurance cos., & that when that method was followed the proviso to sect. 14 (1) had no application:—Held: the proviso applied & applt. co. was not entitled to such relief in respect of expenses of management as would make the income tax paid by it less than would have been payable if the profits had been charged in accordance with Schedule D., Rules applicable to Case I.—EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF UNITED STATES v. 310. Vocation—Systematic betting.]—Persons receiving profits from betting systematically carried on by them throughout the year are chargeable with income tax on such profits in respect of a "vocation" under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), sched. D.

The case states that applts. are partners & attend races & carry on the business of betting. I think the comrs. were right in holding that this is a "vocation." I think it even comes within the meaning of "employment." But "vocation" is a still larger word & is equivalent to "calling." These men systematically bet & make money thereby. Does it lie in their mouths to say that they are not liable to income tax, because they cannot bring an action on the bets they win? That would be putting a construction on these Acts which we ought not to put. I go so far as to say this, that, in my opinion, if a man carried on a systematic business of receiving stolen goods & made by it £2,000 a year, the Income Tax Comrs. would be right in assessing him thereon. I am clear that the facts of the present case come within the meaning of "vocation" (DENMAN, J.).

1. ——— How profits ascertained.]—In a question as to the assessment of income tax on the profits & gains of a co. carrying on the business both of fire & life insurance:—Held: the profits or gains upon the life business could be ascertained by actuarial calculation only, & this actuarial calculation might be obtained by taking the result of the quinquennial investigation prescribed by statute or by an investigation covering the three years prescribed by Schedule D. of the Income Tax Acts.—SCOTTISH UNION & NATIONAL INSURANCE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE (1889), 16 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 461, 475; 26 Sc. L. R. 330.—SCOT.

312. — Whether one or more—Question of fact.]—Resp. was employed during the day by a bank as a French correspondent at a salary in respect of which he was assessed to income tax under Schedule E. but, by concession, on a three years' average. During the year of assessment he commenced evening work, in addition, in a similar capacity for a private firm, & was remunerated by commission in respect of which he was assessed under Schedule D. on the amount of his actual earnings for the year as from a new employment. On appeal to the General Comrs. against the latter assessment he contended that his earnings from the bank & the firm were derived from the single vocation of French correspondent & the three years' average basis should be applied in assessing his total remuneration for the year in question. In view of Great Western Ry. Co. v. Bate, No. 486, post, the inspector of taxes did not find any argument on the circumstance that one of the assessments had in fact been made under Schedule E. & the General Comrs. upheld resp.'s claim to average his earnings from the two sources:—Held: (1) while profits assessable under Schedule D. could not be commingled with profits assessable under Schedule E. for the purpose of average, & employments under Schedule D., if separate, must be separately assessed, the question whether in any case there are two employments or vocations or merely two activities of one employment or vocation is one of fact; (2) the determination of the Comrs. in the present case was one of fact, & there was no evidence upon which it could be questioned.—ELLIOTT v. The grant was renewable at the discretion of the council, & such renewal was upon the condition that the curate obtained donations to the fund to half the amount of the grant:—Held: the curate was not assessable to the income tax in respect of the sum granted, either under Income Tax Act, compensation for loss of employment as agent to the estates resulting from the sale in question & should be excluded from assessment:—Held: the whole of the fees was paid as commission incident to services performed in relation to the carrying out of a contract for sale, & was part of the annual gains & profits of the agent for the purposes of assessment to income tax.—HUMPHREY v. By the second rule "the profits . . . on all discounts . . . shall be charged according to the preceding rule in this Case":—Held: (1) transactions in Treasury bills were transactions in discounts within the meaning of Sched. D., Case III., rule 2, & were liable to income tax in respect of the profits arising therefrom; (2) the whole of the difference between the amount paid for a Treasury bill & the amount received on sale or maturity was a profit on a discount & must be taken into computation; (3) where no profits had been derived from transactions in Treasury bills in the year of assessment the taxpayer was not assessable to income tax by reason of the fact that he had made a profit in Treasury bill transactions in the preceding year, inasmuch as the principle of assessment laid down in the first rule of Case III. assumed as a requisite of chargeability the continued existence of the

with the amount of interest payable for that year, & during the same year the firm made a loss, applt.'s share of which included his share of the interest so credited:—Held: the whole of the interest so credited to applt. was properly included in the assessment of applt. for the year 1916–1917.—LEONARD v. 321. Sale of War Stock "cum interest"—Whether part of price chargeable as income.]—A co. sold a holding of 5 per cent. War Stock (1929–1947) on Apr. 10, 1923. The sale was with interest rights, such stock not being dealt in "ex interest" until May 1, 1923. An assessment to income tax was made upon the vending co. for the year 1923–24 in respect of the amount of interest deemed to have accrued on the stock in the period between the last payment of interest & the sale of the stock, it being contended that the price received by the co. on sale of the stock included this interest. The General Comrs. on appeal, decided that the vending co. was not chargeable in respect of such accrued interest:—Held: the co. was not assessable in respect of the interest accrued at the date of sale of the stock.—WIGMORE v. The guaranteed monthly payments were duly made to him from May, 1918, to Oct. 1919, when

been raised by a county council to meet such demands, & while it remains in the hands of their treasurer, interest accrues to them thereon, their liability to income tax is to be determined solely by the amount of such interest, & no account can be taken of the interest paid by the rural district councils or by the boards of guardians upon money borrowed by them for purposes within the administrative county.—PHILLIPS (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. q. — Jus relictae.]—Applt., a trustee on the estate of A., raised an action against the representatives of C. to recover from the latter an asset of the trust estate which, owing to the negligence of C., who was at the time a trustee of A., had not been ingathered. Under the decree of the ct. the representatives of C. were ordered to repay the sum involved, together with interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, from the date at which the sum should have belonged to the estate of A. This interest, together with certain interest on taxed costs, was paid to applt., as trustee, without deduction of income tax:—Held: applt. was rightly assessed under Schedule D. in respect of the interest.—SCHULZE v. amount of income tax applicable to the interest as the trustees were legally entitled to deduct & retain. The interest was paid by the trustees in Aug. 1917, without deduction of income tax & an assessment to income tax in respect thereof was made upon resp. for the year ended Apr. 5, 1919:—Held: the interest on the jus relictae was "interest of money," & resp. was properly chargeable to income tax in respect thereof.—SWEET v. the agreement was terminated in accordance with its provisions, & he was assessed to income tax in respect of the £18,000 so received, no tax having been deducted therefrom on payment. He contended, on appeal to the Special Comrs., that the payments amounting to £18,000 were not income but capital receipts, &, alternatively, if they were income, that they were not royalties for the user of a patent, but annual payments made by virtue of a contract out of the profits of the paying co. within Rules applicable to all Schedules, r. 19 (1), & that he could not be assessed in respect of such payments. The Special Comrs. decided that the payments were income in his hands, but that they were annual payments within Rule 19 (1), & discharged the assessments:—Held: the payments under the guarantee were not annual payments within the Rules applicable to all Schedules, r. 19 (1), & he was assessable in respect of such payments.—*WILD v. In returning the trust income for assessment to income tax for the succeeding tax year the trustees deducted from this sum a sum of £21,847, which they had paid for interest on unpaid estate duty on their testator's estate:—Held: for the purpose of assessment to income tax under 1918 Act, sched. D., Case III., the trustees were not entitled to deduct the sum paid for interest on estate duty, inasmuch as it did not fall within any of the deductions allowed by the Act, &, further, they were not entitled to exemption from income tax on the sum so paid for interest to the Crown, either on the ground that income tax was included therein, or on the ground that that sum was received by the trustees, not on their behalf, but on behalf of the Crown.—

335. Instalments variable.]—By indenture pltf. in consideration of £1,380 to be paid by instalments, granted & sold to deft. a mine of coal for a term of fifty years; & deft. covenanted with pltf. to pay him £150 on the execution of the indenture, & £150 per year after that time, whether a quantity of coal equal to that amount, at & after the rate of £100 per Lancashire acre, should be got out of the mine in the same year or not; & when in any year so many coals should be got out of the mine as would, at the rate of £100 for every Lancashire acre of coals, amount to more than £150 per year, then that deft. would pay for every Lancashire acre of coal the sum of £100 & so in proportion for every greater or less quantity than an acre until the sum of £1,380 should be paid: it being the intent of the parties that pltf. should not, until the £1,380 was paid, receive less than £150 per year, the same yearly rents to be paid half-yearly on June 24 & Dec. 24 in each year. Deft., who had never worked the mine, claimed to deduct from a half-yearly instalment a sum paid by him for income tax:—Held: the instalment of £150 per year was not “rent” within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 60, & assuming it to be “an annual payment” within s. 102, pltf., & not deft. was liable to be assessed to the income tax.—*TAYLOR v. 338. ——— How proportions ascertained.]—The East India Co. were, under contracts made between them & pltf. co., entitled to purchase three railways belonging to pltf. co. at certain dates respectively for gross sums to be ascertained as therein provided, the East India Co. having an option, instead of paying the gross sum, of paying for the railway by means of what was described as an “annuity” to be paid to pltf. co. for a term of years. The rights of the East India Co. under these contracts subsequently became vested in deft. When deft.'s right of purchase accrued as regards two of the railways, but before it accrued as regards the third railway, an arrangement was made between pltf. co. & deft. for the purchase by deft. of three railways simultaneously, in consideration of an annuity for a term of years calculated at the rate of £5 12s. 6d. per annum for every £100 of pltf. co.'s stock commuted at £125. This amount of £6 12s. 6d. was stated in an Act of Parliament confirming the arrangement to have been arrived at on the basis of £5 7s. 6d., part thereof being interest at the rate of £4 6s. per cent. per annum on the said amount of £125, & of a sum of 5s., other part thereof, being the amount required to be set aside & invested half-yearly in every year at a like rate of interest in order to produce by means of a sinking fund the capital sum of £125 or thereabouts at the end of the term for which the annuity was payable. On payment of the annuity income tax had been deducted by deft. in respect of the whole of the annual payment. Pltfs. contended that the deduction should only have been of income tax in respect of so much of the payment as represented interest on unpaid capital in accordance with the decision in Secretary of State in Council of India v. Scoble, No. 337, ante:—Held: (1) the fact that the purchase of the railways had been carried out by agreement, before the date at which deft.'s right of purchase accrued as regards one of the railways, did not constitute a valid legal distinction between the present case & Secretary of State in Council of India v. Scoble, No. 337, ante, & pltf.'s contention was correct; (2) it was not correct to treat the before-mentioned statement in the Act of Parliament as indicating what proportions of the annual sum were respectively payable in respect of capital & interest on unpaid capital.—*EAST INDIAN RY. 346. Annuity not payable out of any fund in England—Annuitant resident abroad.]—(1) The Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund is a fund formed in India, under the sanction of the East India Co., by the subscriptions of their civil servants upon the Bengal establishment, augmented by contributions from the co. & a civil servant who has regularly subscribed to the fund, & retires after the regular period of service, becomes entitled to receive thereout an annuity of 10,000 rupees. The fund is invested in India, & managed there by a committee of nine, four of whom are officially connected with the govt. By an arrangement with the co., the annuitants have the option of receiving their annuity in India, from the managers of the fund or of being paid at the East India House in London, at the rate of 2s. per sicca rupee, the co. being in that case provided out of the fund with moneys for the purpose of making the payments. Pltf., a retired civil servant, entitled to a pension of £1,000 a year, whose permanent residence was in France, elected to receive his annuity in London:—Held: the annuity was not subject to income-tax, under Income Tax Act, 1843 (c. 35), not being payable out of any fund in England; & he might maintain an action for money had & received against the co., to recover sums deducted & retained by them in respect of such tax, & paid over to the comrs.

(2) The ct. allowed a special case to be set down, upon the signature of pltf. & defts.' counsel, the former intimating his intention to argue the case himself.—*UDNEY v. 347. Annuity in lieu of rent—Price of purchase of leasehold interest.]—Pltf. the owner of a leasehold interest expiring in 1912 in certain property which was sublet at a gross rental of £1,925, but subject to the payment of a ground rent of £300 to the superior landlord, contracted with defts. for the sale to them of his interest, the transaction being carried out by two deeds of even date. By the first deed pltf. conveyed & assigned the property to defts. for the residue of the term, subject to the payment of the £300 ground-rent to the superior landlord, which defts. covenanted to pay, the consideration for the assignment being expressed to be the payment by defts. of the sum of £1,000 to pltf. & execution by defts. of a deed of even date. By the latter deed defts. covenanted with pltf. to pay him until the last day of the term the sum of £1,625 per annum by quarterly payments; no sum was fixed as the total amount to be paid. Defts. in making the quarterly payments deducted income tax at the current rate under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), & Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (c. 8), s. 24. Pltf. sought to recover amount deducted:—Held: the intention was for pltf. to receive an Income to the end of the term of the same net amount as he previously received as rent, & the payments were payments of an annuity within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 40, & not payment of a fixed amount by instalments. Deductions therefore were properly made.—CHADWICK v. PEARL LIFE INSURANCE CO., [1905] 2 K. B. 507; 74 L. J. K. B. 671; 93 L. T. 25; 54 W. R. 78; 21 T. L. R. 456.

348. Annuity payable out of income of trust fund—Trusts for accumulation of balance—Income of entire fund taxed at source.]—S. by will gave his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert & invest, to pay certain annuities out of the income & accumulate the residue of the income until the capital became divisible, or for twenty-one years, & subject thereto to hold capital & income in trust for his grandchildren in equal shares. The trustees invested the funds in such manner that the income tax was always deducted before the income was paid to them. The successive trustees for over twenty years paid all the annuities in full without deducting income tax. Some of the trustees were also annuitants:—Held: the trustees were liable to make good to the trust estate the amounts of income tax so overpaid to the annuitants.—Re SHARP, RICKETT v. RICKETT, [1906] 1 Ch. 793; 75 L. J. Ch. 458; 95 L. T. 522; 22 T. L. R. 368; 50 Sol. Jo. 390.

349. ———.]—By a settlement shares in a trading co. to the nominal value of £100,000, bearing interest at 4 per cent., were settled upon trust to pay the dividends & annual income arising therefrom to C. for his life, & after his death, if he should leave two or more children surviving him, to pay the income to the extent of but not exceeding, £2,000 per annum to his widow during her life or widowhood, provided that she should provide for, educate & bring up the children during minority. The settlement also provided that any unapplied balance of the income should be accumulated & held upon trust to divide the same equally among the children C. died on Nov. 4, 1905, leaving a widow & two children him surviving. The trustees received the dividends on the shares less income tax, which was deducted by the co. before payment, & in paying the annual sum of £2,000 to the widow the trustees deducted income tax therefrom:—Held: the trustees had acted on a right principle, & the widow's annuity of £2,000 was properly subject to the deduction of income tax.

It makes no difference whether the annuity is paid as a part of a fund, or whether it is paid as a charge on the fund, it is an annuity which the trustees are liable to pay. They are paying it out of a fund from which deduction has been made, & under the express direction of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 102, in such a case as that, they are entitled to deduct the proportionate part of the tax they have so paid from the person ultimately entitled to receive that annual payment

350. Purchase-money payable in form of annuity—Deferred annuities not comprising capital.]—In 1879 under a private Act the Secretary of State for India purchased the East Indian Railway for a sum payable by an annuity calculated to repay the whole of the capital of the railway co. by 1953 together with interest on the capital from time to time remaining unpaid. The contract provided that as to one-fifth of the capital the Secretary of State might agree with the co. that shareholders, described as deferred annuitants, should receive 4 per cent. interest plus one-fifth of the net profits of the railway, but the Secretary of State had power to terminate this arrangement, in which event the deferred annuitants were to receive the same annuity as the other annuitants. The arrangement having been made, the Secretary of State, before paying the deferred annuities, deducted the whole of the income tax upon them on the ground that, although it had been held in East Indian Ry. Co. v. Secretary of State in Council of India, No. 338, ante, that so much of the ordinary annuities as represented the repayment of capital was not subject to income tax, yet no part of the deferred annuities represented the repayment of capital. In an action by the co. against the Secretary of State:—Held: no repayment of capital was included in the deferred annuities & the Secretary of State was entitled to deduct the whole of the income tax upon them.—*EAST INDIAN RY. The husband having deducted income tax from his wife's annuity,

she challenged his right to do so on the ground that her annuity had been taxed at its source, the father having paid the tax on his own income, but deducted nothing therefor from the sums paid by him to his son, & the Crown having made no claim on the son for income tax:—Held: the wife's annuity being payable as a personal debt or obligation in virtue of a contract, the husband was entitled to deduct the income tax therefrom.—*DALRYMPLE v. In compliance with the order the husband duly secured the £3 a week, but in paying both sums he deducted income tax therefrom. Upon an application by the wife for leave to issue execution in respect of the amount of tax so deducted, the judge dismissed the summons, & from his decision the wife appealed:—Held: (1) as to the weekly payment of £3, the order appealed from was right. There was no order on resp. to pay that sum, & no order on which execution could issue against him; (2) as to the weekly payment of £2, the payment was a taxable annual payment within Case III., Rules applicable to case III., r. 1 (a), of Sched. His rate of pay was largely increased & he received in addition to his regimental pay 10s. per day as "command pay" & also certain daily allowances in respect of fuel, light, rations, etc. Income tax was deducted from his regimental pay, but not from his command pay or allowances. Pltf. claimed to recover from deft. arrears of maintenance on the basis that both command pay & allowances were "pay" within the meaning of the award & that deft. was not entitled to deduct income tax in respect of command pay as he had not himself paid tax thereon:—Held: (1) the amount received by deft. in respect of allowances was not "pay" within the meaning of the award, but that "command pay" was "pay" within the meaning of the award & must therefore be brought into account by deft. in calculating the amount payable to pltf.; (2) as income tax was in strict law payable in respect of command pay deft. was entitled to deduct income tax from any sum which he might pay to pltf. in respect thereof, notwithstanding that he had not himself paid income tax thereon.—*BAYLEY v. d. Interest on shares.—In an action at the instance of a ward for reduction of the sale of part of her estate which consisted in shares in a public co., the ct. found that on repayment by the pursuer of the price received for the shares with interest at 5 per cent. the pursuer would be entitled to restitution of the shares with the dividends accruing thereon. The pursuer tendered payment of the price with 5 per cent. interest under deduction of income tax on the interest:—Held: as between pursuer

369b. Payments on account to debenture-holders—Whether attributed to capital or interest—Security insufficient.]—A debenture trust deed executed by a co. provided that the trustees should appropriate the proceeds of the realisation of the securities in the first place towards payment of all arrears of interest on the debentures, & secondly, towards payment of the principal. The co. made default, & an action was brought on behalf of the debenture-holders to enforce their security. The judgment in the action ordered that the trusts of the deed should be carried into execution, & directed that the usual accounts & inquiries should be taken & made. The securities were gradually realised, & orders were from time to time made under which certain sums were paid to the debenture-holders on account of interest, after deducting income tax. When the order on further consideration was made there was evidence that the securities would prove insufficient, & that order directed that pl'tfs.' taxed costs as between solr. & client should be paid by the trustees out of the moneys in their hands. The subsequent orders for payment to the debenture-holders directed that the payments should be made on account generally of what was due for principal & interest. The securities having been practically all realised, the trustees had in their hands a sum of money which they proposed to pay to the debenture-holders. It was admitted that if the whole of the payments to the debenture-holders were attributed to principal they would be insufficient to discharge the full amount due. The Comrs. of Inland Revenue claimed that all the payments made on account generally ought to be attributed to interest in the first place, & that income tax should be deducted from them. Upon a summons taken out by the trustees of the deed to determine this question:—Held: upon the construction of the orders which directed payments on account generally, & having regard to the circumstances of the case, the ct. when making those orders had purposely left open for future determination the question how the payments were to be ultimately appropriated as between principal & interest, & it being now clearly for the benefit of the debenture-holders that those payments should be appropriated to principal, they ought to be so appropriated, without putting the debenture-holders to an election how the appropriation should be made, & consequently income tax ought not to be deducted.

But the order was made without prejudice to the question whether the payments, or any part or parts thereof, ought, in the hands of the persons to whom payments had been made, to be treated as principal or interest.—SMITH v. LAW GUARANTEE & TRUST SOCIETY, LTD., [1904] 2 Ch. 569; 73 L. J. Ch. 733; 91 L. T. 545; 20 T. L. R. 789; 12 Mans. 66, C. A.

370. Payment under composition deed — Payment of lump sum—*Claim to deduct tax in respect of unpaid arrears of interest.]—*A debtor who executes a deed under Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134), s. 142, providing for payment of a composition of eight shillings in the pound, cannot deduct from the balance due to a cash creditor, the income tax from year to year becoming payable upon the amount of interest due to such creditor, & which might have been deducted provided such interest had been regularly paid.—*Re TRUST DEED, Ex p. 371. — Payment of fixed yearly sum—With interest until payment.]—Debtor assigned a fund to trustees, upon trust to pay a fixed sum yearly to his creditors, pro rata, with interest on their debts till payment:—Held: the trustees should have deducted income tax from the several payments of interest; & this not having been done, the debtor was entitled, in finally settling with his creditors, to be allowed for the deductions which should have been made.—CRANE v. KILPIN (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 334; 37 L. J. Ch. 913; 18 L. T. 350.

372. Instalments due on building society mortgage—Instalments including interest.]—W. borrowed from a building society a sum of money on mtge. of certain property. The advance was repayable over a term of years by periodical instalments covering principal, interest, & charges for working expenses. W. regularly made the repayments in respect of his advance until his death, which occurred sometime prior to 1881. In that year the exors. of W. applied to the society for liberty to deduct income tax from such repayments. The directors of the society stated that they had nothing to do with the question of income tax as payable upon property upon which the society had made advances, & that the repayments must be paid in full in accordance with the society's rules. Shortly afterwards the society was ordered to be wound up. In 1885 the exors. of W. applied to the official liquidators of the society to allow them to deduct income tax from the repayment falling due that month, not only in respect of that repayment, but also of all repayments made since 1877. This was refused on the ground that, whatever might be the law on the subject of income tax that part which represented income tax due prior to the winding-up of the society could not be deducted, as any claim in respect of it must be proved in the ordinary way as a claim in the winding-up. In the result, the exors., under protest by the liquidators, deducted income tax in respect of repayments, made since 1877. No mention of income tax was contained in the society's rules, & the society, whilst a going concern, invariably refused to allow advanced shareholders to deduct anything from the repayments in respect of income tax.

A summons was taken out on behalf of the liquidators asking that the exors. of W. might be ordered to pay the sum which they had deducted for income tax:—Held: the exors. were entitled to deduct income tax in respect of the present repayment, & also from future repayments, but only upon so much thereof as represented interest; but that they could not be allowed to deduct anything for income tax in respect of past repayments.

374. Judgment debt.]—A bkpcy. notice required payment of a certain sum claimed as being the amount due on a final judgment. In the margin of the notice particulars of the amount claimed were given, namely, debt so much, interest at 4 per cent. to date so much. Objection was taken that this notice was bad as it claimed interest in full without allowing for income tax which could or ought to have been deducted by the debtor:—Held: a judgment debt, though by law carrying interest from the date of the judgment, was not a transaction to which the language of the Income Tax Acts relating to "yearly interest of money" applied, & the notice was valid & the receiving order based upon it rightly made.—Re COOPER, [1911] 2 K. 376. Apportioned expenses of street paving.]—Pltfs., as the urban authority of a borough, had under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 150, & the local Act, 1867, some years before action brought paved & made up certain streets, & had from time to time apportioned the expenses thereof among the owners of the premises fronting thereon. Deft. was the owner of premises in these streets, & pltfs., under the power conferred upon them by s. 32 of the local Act, 1867, allowed him time for the repayment of the sums apportioned in respect of his premises, interest being payable thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. Deft. paid to pltfs. varying sums at irregular intervals in part payment of the amount due which pltfs. credited in the first place to the interest due & in the second place towards payment of the principal. There was no evidence to show that pltfs. made a regular practice of allowing these expenses to remain unpaid, bearing interest, as a mode of investing their funds. Deft. claimed, upon paying off the final amount due for principal & interest, to be entitled to deduct the income tax upon the amount due for interest as being "yearly interest of money" within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 40:—Held: the interest did not come within the words "yearly interest of money" in s. 40, & therefore deft. was not entitled to deduct income tax therefrom.—GATESHEAD CORPN. v. Interest payable in lump sum—Calculated by the year—Simple interest.]—By a mtge. of June 1, 1888, the mtgor. covenanted that on his death or on his son's death, whichever event should first happen, he, his exors., administrators or assigns would pay to the mtgee. the principal sum secured together with simple interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum reckoned from Aug. 10, 1887, up to the time of such death, & if the aggregate amount of such sum & interest or any part thereof should not then be paid, would pay interest on the unpaid part by equal half yearly payments the first of such payments to be made at the expiration of six calendar months from the death of the mtgor. or his son whichever event should first happen, & would make these payments without any deduction. The mtgor. predeceased his son & died in 1906. His exor. paid to the mtgee. interest on the aggregate sum consisting of principal & interest found due at the mtgor.'s death. He now proposed to pay off the aggregate amount due on the mtge. & he claimed the right in doing so to deduct income tax on so much of the aggregate sum as represented interest:—Held: (1) the interest had not been capitalised by the contract between the parties; (2) inasmuch as the interest was calculated by the year it was "yearly interest" within Income Tax, 1853 (c. 34), s. 40, although it was payable in a lump sum at an uncertain date; & the mtgor.'s exor. was entitled to deduct income tax.—Re CRAVEN'S MORTGAGE, DAVIES v. On the death of the lunatic her estate was administered by the ct. & by the order on further consideration the £40,000 was paid to the society out of funds in ct. & sufficient funds were carried over to a separate account to answer the compound interest payable under the deed subject to income tax, if any. The society claimed payment of the compound interest without deduction of income tax on the ground that it had been capitalised:—Held: the compound interest had not been capitalised, & was "interest money" within r. 1 (a) of Rules applicable to Case III., in Schedule D. to 1918 Act, & the mtgors. under r. 19 (1) of the Rules applicable to all the Schedules to the Act were entitled on payment of the interest by way of deduction for income tax to so much of the funds carried over to the separate account as was equal to the income tax in each yearly instalment of interest as & when it became due.—*Re MORRIS, MAYHEW v. It being contemplated that it would be necessary for the local authority to borrow money to enable the co. to construct & fit up apparatus, a clause of the agreement provided that the co. should pay half-yearly to the local authority sums equal to the sums paid by the local authority in the preceding half-year for interest & sinking fund on money borrowed:—Held: the sums payable half-yearly by the co. were an "annual payment" within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 40, & the co. in making the payments were entitled to deduct income tax accordingly.—*SURBITON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. The lessee authority claimed to be entitled to deduct income tax from the whole of the amount of the half-yearly rent paid by them under the agreement, while the lessor contended that the rent should be such a sum as would be sufficient, after deducting income tax, to pay the actual interest & instalment of the capital of the loan:—Held: upon the true construction of the agreement, & having regard to Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 40, the lessee authority was entitled to deduct the income tax from the rent.—*POOLE CORPN. v. Annual payments wholly paid out of taxed income—What amounts to—No fund set apart for purpose.]—Appl. co. carried on the ordinary business of a life insurance co., including the granting of annuities. The co-partnership contract of the co. provided that every policy of insurance or other obligation should contain a clause declaring that the capital, stock, & funds of the co. should be the only fund answerable for any demand under such policy or other obligation. The co. had a very large annual income from interest, dividends, & rents, from which income tax was deducted at the source. The income from interest, dividends & rents was amply sufficient to pay the annuities in full. The co. also had an income from premiums, but if the income from interest, dividends, & rents had been deducted from the co.’s revenue the trading of the co. would have resulted in a quinquennium deficit. No formal appropriation of the income from interest, dividends, & rents was made in the books, nor was any particular fund specially charged with the payment of the annuities. In paying their annuities the co. deducted the amount of income tax due in respect thereof & retained the amount of the tax so deducted:—Held: the co. were entitled to retain for their own benefit the whole of the income tax deducted from the annuities, for where annuities are charged upon a tax-bearing fund from which the tax has been deducted at its source & which is amply sufficient to pay them in full, although not set apart for that purpose, they cannot be held to be not “payable” or not wholly “payable out of profits or gains authority which was secured by mtge. not over the buildings but on the rates & assessments which the same statute authorised the comrs. to levy. An annual sum of £92 10s. was payable as interest on the sum so borrowed & secured. This sum was raised by a special rate which was not credited with the rents received from part of the county buildings. These rents were placed to the credit of the county general assessment. The comrs. in paying the interest, deducted the amount of income tax thereon. On the comrs. being assessed under Schedule D. for the income tax as the interest, they maintained that they were entitled to retain it on the ground

They were also an urban sanitary authority, & their expenses as such were payable out of a "consolidated fund" maintained by a "consolidated rate" levied under statutory authority, but not upon the same basis as the borough rate. As a municipal corpn. they were the owners of certain undertakings in respect of which they had received loans, the interest on which was charged on the proceeds of the undertakings, which were paid into the borough fund, & they paid income tax on such receipts. As a sanitary authority they were the owners of other undertakings, the proceeds of which were paid into the consolidated fund in a similar manner. The proceeds of these latter undertakings were not sufficient to pay the interest due on the loans raised in respect of them, & resps. transferred a sum from the borough fund to meet the deficiency:—Held: as it was not lawful to pay such charges out of that fund, resps. were bound to account for the income tax which they had deducted from the interest or dividends so paid & their position was not affected by the provisions of the Leeds Corporation (General Powers) Act, 1901.—SUGDEN v. 407. Construction of private Act.]—Shrewsbury Estate Act, 1843 (c. xxviii), s. 7, empowered any owner in possession of the settled estates by deed to appoint a jointure to his wife for life not exceeding the yearly sum of £3,000, "clear of all deductions whatsoever for taxes or otherwise," but by sects. 9, 10 the estates were not at any time to be subject to the payment of more than £6,000 in respect of three or more jointures, & there were complicated provisions as to the way the excess should be borne between a second & subsequent jointures, the subsequent jointures up to £1,000 being in this respect placed before the second jointure. By a jointure deed of July 20, 1910, the Earl of Shrewsbury exercised this power by appointing two jointures of £1,500 to Lady Shrewsbury, "clear of all deductions whatsoever for taxes or otherwise." On May 5, 1904, another jointure of £1,000 had been appointed to the wife of the Earl's son & heir apparent under Shrewsbury Estate Act, 1862 (c. v), s. 33, which did not contain the words "clear of all deductions," etc. This became payable on the son's death on Jan. 8, 1915, but it was not suggested that it was free from income tax. The total amount of jointures now payable were under £6,000. The Earl died on May 17, 1921. The question then arose whether Lady Shrewsbury's jointures were payable free of income tax.—Held: on the authorities, having regard to the provisions of Income Tax Acts, & on the construction of the Shrewsbury Estate Act, 1843 (c. xxviii), applt. was entitled to have her jointures paid in full free from deduction of income tax.—*Re SHREWSBURY ESTATE ACTS, SHREWSBURY v. 408. Covenant to pay clear annual sum.]—By his marriage settlement the husband covenanted that if during the widowhood of his wife the income of his wife's trust fund in any year should not amount to the clear annual sum of £2,000 his exors. should in every such year pay to his widow such a sum as would make up the income to £2,000.—Held: the exors. were entitled to deduct income tax on the amount by which the income of the wife's trust fund fell short of £2,000.—Re COOPER'S ESTATE (1911), 55 Sol. Upon an application by deft., for a settlement the parties agreed the terms of the order. By the settlement pltf. charged the income to which she was beneficially entitled, under her father's will, with the payments thereafter mentioned, & directed the trustees of the will during the joint lives of pltf. & deft. & the child, & whilst the latter should be under the age of twenty-one years, to pay to deft. an annual sum equal to one-fourth of her annual net income, after income tax on the whole income had been paid, or if one fourth part of the said annual net income should be less than £2,500 (which event happened) then the clear annual sum of £2,500, without deducting income tax therefrom out of such annual net income, for the maintenance of himself & the child. Income tax on the whole of the income to which pltf. was entitled under her father's will had been deducted at the source or paid by the trustees of the will. Pltf. claimed that the provision for payment of the clear annual sum of £2,500 to deft. without deduction of income tax was void under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), ss. 102, 103, & she was entitled to deduct income tax therefrom.—Held: the settlement took effect according to its terms & was not affected by sects. 102 & 103.—*BROOKE v. By a supplemental deed P. further covenanted for himself & his exors., etc., to make good any deficiency in the annuity. The income from the settled property became insufficient to provide the annuity, & the deficiency was made good by P., but on his death his extrix. declined to make it good. Upon a summons by pltf. for a declaration of her rights under the settlement:—Held: the settlement to pay the annuity clear of income tax as well as the covenant by P. to make up any deficiency, so far as it related to the tax, fell within the mischief of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 103, & 1919 Act, & were void & unenforceable.—*Re PECK'S SETTLEMENT, PECK v. which was in direct violation of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 103, & was therefore void & the annuitant was not entitled to have the annuity of £5,000, paid to her free of either ordinary income tax or super tax.—*Re GRETTON'S INDENTURE, Re RATCLIFF & BRINCKMAN'S TRUSTS, HOOD v. The judge thereupon made a decree by which he found for the validity of the will & directed that the terms of compromise should be filed & made a rule of Ct. On an application by deft. for a declaration that the administratrix was not entitled to deduct income tax from the half-yearly payments of the annuity:—Held: (1) the £300 per annum was not a sum payable under an order of the ct. but was an annuity charged upon the estate by virtue of a contract & as such was chargeable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 102; (2) the administratrix was entitled under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 41, to deduct & retain the income tax which became payable on the half-yearly payments.

(3) Orders of the Divorce Div. directing payment of alimony or permanent maintenance free of income tax are not within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 103, therefore the practice with regard to them has no right application to cases where the payments are made in pursuance of contracts.—*Re SHAW, SMITH v. SECT. 5.—CASE IV.—INCOME ARISING FROM SECURITIES OUT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

See Schedule D., Case IV. & Miscellaneous Rules applicable to Schedule D., r. 7; 1924 Act, s. 27.

422. Application of Case—Confined to dividends actually remitted to United Kingdom.—Interest arising from foreign securities & paid abroad is not "received in the United Kingdom" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D., Case IV., & is therefore not chargeable with income tax under that clause, unless it is remitted to the United Kingdom.

A life assurance society carried on business at home & abroad, the head office being in London, where the accounts & balance sheets were made up, the profits ascertained & the dividends paid. The interest upon the society's foreign securities paid abroad was received there by their agents, & part of it was applied abroad for the purposes of the society. All the interest on foreign securities was taken into account in the balance-sheets upon which the profits were ascertained:—Held: taking the interest into account was not equivalent to a 418 i. Whether valid.—Testator left to his wife an annuity "free from all burdens taxes & deductions whatsoever" & declared to it be in full of all her legal rights:—Held: she was entitled to the annuity without deduction of income tax.—MACKIE'S TRUSTEES v. MACKIE, ETC. (1875), 2 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 312; 12 Sc. L. R. 222.—SCOT.

418 ii. ——Testator directed his trustees to hold the whole of the free residue of his estate for behoof of his wife in life " & to pay to her the free revenue & proceeds thereof." By a codicil he directed that "in the event of the income of the free residue of my estate which is to be paid to my wife exceeding in any year the sum of £2,000 my trustees shall restrict the payment to my wife out of the said income to the sum of £2,000 per annum." The annual income of the trust estate after deduction of all outlays including income tax always largely exceeded the sum of £2,000:—Held: the widow was entitled to an annual payment of £2,000 free from any deduction on account of income tax.—MURDOCH v. MURDOCH, [1918] S. C. 738.—SCOT.

418 iii. ——Testator directed his trustees to pay out of the "net annual proceeds" of one half of the residue of his estate the sum of £750 yearly to his niece for her life for alimentary use:—Held: the niece was entitled to an annual payment of the sum of £750, without any deduction on account of income tax.—SMITH'S TRUSTEES v. GAYDON, [1919] S. C. 95; 56 Sc. L. R. 92.—SCOT.

418 iv. ——Testator left his whole estate to trustees in trust "to pay to my wife the free yearly income thereof up to if possible the sum of £600 per annum as an alimentary provision to cover all rent rates & taxes, any remaining annual income from the estate above £600 to be paid (failing my leaving any lawful issue) to or for the benefit of my nephews & nieces." The free annual income exceeded £600:—Held: the £600 fell to be paid to the widow subject to, & not free of, income tax.—WILSON'S TRUSTEES v. WILSON, [1919] S. C. 359.—SCOT.

m. What amounts to devise or bequest free of tax.—A widow to whom her husband has bequeathed an annuity "exempted from all burdens & deductions whatsoever" is only entitled to payment of her annuity, less income tax, that tax not being "a burden" or "deduction" intended by testator to be borne by the trust estate.—KINLOCH'S TRUSTEES v. KINLOCH (1880), 7 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 596; 17 Sc. L. R. 444.—SCOT.

n. Annuity accepted by widow in full satisfaction of rights.—A husband directed his trustees to pay his wife if she survived him "a yearly annuity" of £1,200 & he further provided that if she accepted this annuity it should be in full satisfaction of all her rights, legal & conventional. The wife survived & accepted the annuity:—Held: it was unnecessary to decide whether the bequest of a free annuity was equivalent to the bequest of an annuity free of income tax, as if it were, the widow, by accepting the annuity as in her legal right, had entered into an agreement of the nature struck at by Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 103.—RODGER'S TRUSTEES v. RODGER (1875), 2 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 294; 12 Sc. L. R. 204.—SCOT.

What amounts to receipt in United Kingdom—Company with branches abroad—Dividends of foreign securities used by branches in liquidating local payments—Constructive receipt.]—A life assurance co., having its head office & directors in the United Kingdom, carried on business in the East Indies by means of branches with agents & committees of management. Accounts were made up yearly, & from the aggregate results of the entire business both at home & abroad it was determined what amount of profits should be divided between the shareholders & policy-holders. The moneys received at the branches in India included interest & dividends arising from securities in Her Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, & were used as far as required in liquidating payments at those branches. Any balances were retained for use as required, or were dealt with as required by the directors in London. An equivalent for the amount of such interest & dividends, if not retained abroad, would have to be sent out from the United Kingdom to India for the general conduct & due discharge of the obligations of the society's business in India:—Held: the interest & dividends were constructively received by the society in the United Kingdom, & as such were assessable under income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D., Case IV.—UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. 426. "Income"—Remittance to United Kingdom on account of surplus of mixed capital & income fund—Balance retained abroad.]—By 1842 Act, s. 100, it is provided that the duty chargeable under Sched. D, Case IV. in respect of interest from "securities" in the Colonies, etc., is to be computed on the sums which have been, or will be, received in Great Britain in the current year. A mutual life assurance society with its head office in Edinburgh, & where its management was exclusively vested in directors, sent to Australia for investment down to the end of 1898 a total sum of £1,504,000. The total remittances made to this country to the same date was £716,500, while the total funds in Australia, including accumulated interest & deducting all Australian expenses to the same date, was £1,822,207. The funds still remaining in Australia thus exceeded by £318,207 the sums sent there for investment. The amount remitted to this country from Australia in 1898 was £217,350. All this except £5,000 was intermixed with the society's funds in Australia, & the society did not show in their statement that the balance of £212,350 was in fact capital sent home:—Held: the Income Tax Comrs. had rightly charged the £212,350 with income tax.—SCOTTISH PROVIDENT INSTITUTION v. ALLAN, [1903] A. C. 129; 72 L. J. P. C. 70; 88 L. T. 478; 67 J. P. 341; 19 T. L. R. 432; 4 Tax Cas. 591, H. L.

D., Case IV., so that income tax was to be charged on the amount received during the current year, & such interest was not "income arising from rents" within the same section, in which case it would have fallen within Sched. D., Case V., & the tax would have been chargeable on the average amount received during the three preceding years.—HUDSON'S BAY Co. v. THEW, THEW v. HUDSON'S BAY Co., [1919] 2 K. vestments of a Scottish insurance co. was reinvested in America in bearer bonds, & the bonds were transmitted to this country in the same year. The bonds were afterwards sold, & the proceeds of the sale were received at under the Income Tax Acts & Finance Act, 1914 (c. 10), s. 5, in respect of the dividends arising from those shares is to be computed on the average of the three preceding years.—*SINGER v. 431. Assessment—Person intrusted with payment in the United Kingdom—No actual receipt by agency of dividends from abroad—Payment by agency out of its own profits.]—The Imperial Ottoman Bank, a foreign corpn., have an agency in London, carrying on their business of banking & earning profits there. The English profits in the hands of the London agency being in excess of the amount required for the payment of the dividends of those shareholders who resided in England, no remittance from abroad out of foreign profits was made towards their payment. The London agency was assessed to & paid income tax on the English profits for that year, as returned by them under Schedule D. upon an average of the preceding three years, such average being less than the amount of English profits actually earned in the year. They made a return also in respect of dividends, "that there were no interest, dividends or other annual payments payable out of or in respect of the stocks, funds, or shares of the bank, & within the meaning of Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 10, "intrusted" to them for payment to persons in the United Kingdom." The comrs. having made an assessment upon the whole amount of dividends so paid:—Held: the London agency of the Imperial Ottoman Bank were persons "intrusted," under Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 10, with the payment of the dividends on the shares presented in London, & therefore must, under that sect., make a return of the whole amount of such dividends; but as such dividends were paid partly out of the English profits of the bank, which had already paid income tax under Schedule D., the bank were entitled to a deduction representing the proportion of the dividends paid in England which was attributable to English-made profits.—*GILBERTSON v. directors of the English co., having agreed upon the amount to be distributed out of the profits, informed the American co. of the rate of dividend which the directors thought should be declared by that co. on their shares. On hearing that the American co. had declared a dividend the directors declared a dividend of a similar value upon the shares in the English co. No dividend warrant was issued by the American co., but the amount of profits to be divided on the shares held by the English co., so far as that amount was required for distribution among the shareholders of the English co., was sent over to the English co. in London, such portion of the dividend as was required for certain American shareholders in the English co. being retained by the American co., & distributed by them direct in America on behalf of the English co.:—Held: the profits of the English co. arose from "foreign possessions," so as to bring the case within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case V.; the portion of the profits retained in America for distribution among the American shareholders of the English co. was not received by that co. in England within the meaning of Case V.; the business on which the profits depended being wholly carried on abroad, the decision of the House of Lords in *Colquhoun v. The affairs of the co. were managed & controlled wholly by its directors. It did not carry on any manufacturing business, nor sell any materials or goods, in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. In dividing any profits made the directors declared a dividend in London on all applt. co.'s shares, of which a large number were held by foreigners living in Germany. The dividends due to the applt. co. in respect of its shares in the German cos. were, at the request of the directors, paid by those cos. into banks abroad, & applied in paying the dividend, when declared, to the foreign shareholders of applt. co.:—Held: this case also was brought within the decision of the House of Lords in *Colquhoun v. The applt. did not comply with this precept:—Held: as applt. had refused to disclose the facts necessary to establish his contentions, the evidence before the comrs. was

441. ——— Remittance of income from foreign trust—Remittances in uncontrolled discretion of trustees.]—A foreigner resident abroad by his will gave his property, which was situate abroad, to trustees upon trust for the benefit of his deceased son's children, who were minors, for life, & their issue after them, there being a provision that the trustees should accumulate the income of the respective shares of the children & add the accumulations to capital until each child should attain the age of twenty-five years, when the child was to become entitled to a portion of the accumulated fund. The will contained a direction to the trustees "out of the net income of the proportionate share of the trust estate held in trust for any child" to make such provision from time to time as they in their uncontrolled discretion might think necessary or advisable for the suitable maintenance & education of such child. The trustees from time to time remitted to the mother of the children, who was their guardian, & who was residing with them in England, sums of money in accordance with the provisions of the will for the maintenance & education of the children:—Held: these remittances in the hands of the mother were assessable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case V., as being moneys received in this country in respect of foreign possessions.—DRUMMOND v. COLLINS, [1915] A. C. 1011; 84 L. J. K. B. 1690; 113 L. T. 665; 31 T. L. R. 482; 59 Sol. Appct. was assessed to income tax on this income under Schedule D.:—Held: (1) although the stocks & shares were not in law the possessions of appct.'s wife & she had only an equitable right to call upon the trustees to administer the estate, yet appct. was chargeable with tax under rule 1 of Rules applicable to Case V. of Sched. 445. ——— Profits already treated as profits of English company.]—An English co. held practically all the common stock in an American co. which it had formed. In 1915, 1916, & 1917 the American co. was managed & controlled from England, so that it was taxable, & taxed as resident in this country, upon its whole profits under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 100, Sched. D., Case I. The English co. bore its share of taxation by deduction by the American co. from its dividends of a proportionate part of the tax. In 1917 the management & control of the American co. was transferred to America. The revenue authorities then assessed the English co., under Schedule D., Case V., upon the amount of the American dividends as profits received from a “foreign possession,” & claimed to treat the amount of dividends received from the American co. in the years 1915–1917 as being also profits received from a “foreign possession” in order to ascertain the three years’ average on which the assessment for the subsequent years under Case V. was to be founded:—Held: for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts the locality of the shares or stock of a co. was to be determined not by its place of incorporation or registration, but by its place of residence & trading, & consequently the dividends received by the English co. on the stock in the American co. during the years 1915–1917 ought not to be brought into average in computing the liability of the English co. to income tax in respect of foreign possessions under Schedule D., Case V., for the years 1918–1920.—*BRADBURY v. Resp., however, was assessed on the sum of £3,424, being the average of the three preceding years. The rooms were let upon terms which included the provision of seating, heating, & attendance, but an additional charge was made for gas & electricity consumed:—Held: the profits derived from the letting of the rooms were assessable to income tax under Schedule D., either under Case I., as the profits of a trade or business, or under Case VI. of that Schedule, & there was, therefore, no exemption conferred by the Income Tax Acts which was applicable to the profits.—COMAN v. The whole of the income of the trust for the three years ending Apr. 5, 1918, 1919 & 1920 had been applied by the trustees to certain charitable institutions in accordance with written directions given at various dates by R. The trustees applied to the Special Comrs. under the provisions of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 105, & 1918 Act, s. 37 (1) (b), for repayment of the income tax which had been deducted at the source from the trust income during the three years ending Apr. 5, 1918, 1919 & 1920, on the ground that under the deed of trust the income in question was applicable to charitable purposes only & had been so applied. The application being unsuccessful, the trustees applied for & obtained a rule nisi calling upon the Special Comrs. to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to allow exemption from income tax on the income in question & to repay the tax which had been deducted therefrom :—Held : discharging the rule nisi, inasmuch as the settlor possessed under the deed of settlement power to execute an appointment in favour of purposes that were not charitable, the deed did not create a trust for charitable purposes only within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 105, & 1918 Act, s. 37 (1) (b), although ultimately powers were exercised by the settlor in favour of charity; & the trustees were not, therefore, entitled to claim repayment of the tax deducted from the trust income during the years 1918, 1919 & 1920.—*R. v. 480. — Balance of income from profits of business.—A testator bequeathed to his trustees the goodwill of & the property in certain proprietary medicines upon trust out of the annual income & profits thereof to pay certain annuities, & subject thereto, upon trust to pay the balance of the annual income & profits thereof to certain persons, since deceased, & after their deaths to pay such yearly balance to a charitable society. The yearly profits & the annual income & profits arising from certain other proprietary medicines were to be paid, after the deaths of certain persons, to the same society. After testator's death his business in these properties was carried on by his trustees who paid the balance of the income & profits, after satisfying the various annuities, to the charitable society in accordance with the directions of the will. The charity claimed exemption from income tax under 1918 Act, s. 37, in respect of the sums so received from testator's trustees, & repayment under sect. 40 of the Act of the tax which had been deducted & paid by the trustees before paying the yearly sums to the charity:—Held: (1) the money received by the charity from testator's trustees was an annual payment within 1918 Act, s. 37 (b), which grants exemption from income tax under Schedule D. in respect of any yearly interest or other annual payment forming part of the income of a charity, & therefore, that the charity was entitled to the exemption & repayment claimed; (2) although the amount of the tax paid by the trustees on the profits of the business had been computed & paid in the usual way upon a three years' average, nevertheless the charity had shown that the duty in respect of each yearly payment had been paid by deduction or otherwise, within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 105.

Semble: the question of repayment cannot arise under 1918 Act, because sect. 40 (3), of that Act provides, "where the Special Comrs. allow a claim they shall issue an order for repayment."—*R. v. 483. — Gift of residue for charitable purposes—Extent of relief.—By Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 88, Sched. C., r. 3, coupled with sect. 105 of the Act, charitable institutions are exempted from the duties on any yearly interest or other annual payment chargeable under Schedule D., in so far as the same shall be applied to charitable purposes only, & the exemption is to be allowed by the Comrs. for Special Purposes on due proof before them. Testator who died on Nov. 14, 1914, by his will bequeathed the residue of his property, which consisted of stocks & shares, to a charitable institution absolutely. Between the date of testator's death & Dec. 4, 1916, when the residue was finally ascertained & distributed, the exors. received income of the estate from which income tax had been deducted at the source. The income so received by the exors. was part of the fund handed over in due course by them to the charitable institution. The institution claimed the return of the income tax deducted on the ground that the deduction was contrary to Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 105:—Held: until the date when the residue was ascertained the institution had no property in any specific investment forming part of the estate, or in the income therefrom, the payment by deduction of income tax made by the exors. in respect of the income was not made on behalf of the institution, & the institution was therefore not entitled to repayment of the income tax so paid.—*BARNARDO'S HOMES v. SUB-SECT. 1.—PUBLIC OFFICE AND EMPLOYMENT OF PROFIT.

See Schedule E.

484. Transfer of employment from Sched. D.—Effect of 1922 Act, s. 18 (6).—I. was an assistant of the second class in the employment of the London County Council, & was remunerated by a salary & bonus which varied with the cost of living. His remuneration for the year ending Apr. 5, 1922, was £436. A first assessment for that year was made upon applt. under Schedule E. in the sum of £359. No appeal was made against that assessment, & the duty was paid, although in accordance with the decisions in Great Western Railway v. Bater, No. 486, post, applt. was not liable to assessment under Schedule E., but should have been assessed under Schedule D. on the average of his remuneration for the three preceding years in the sum of £259 only. On Sept. 13, 1922, an additional assessment under Schedule E. was made on I. under 1918 Act, s. 125, in respect of the balance of his remuneration for the year ending Apr. 5, 1922, in the sum of £77. He appealed against this additional assessment on the ground that the first assessment being excessive it was not competent to the Crown to make an additional assessment upon him:—Held: an additional assessment was covered by the words “any assessment” in above sub-sect., & there being abundant reason to have proceeded under 1918 Act, s. 125 (1), to make an additional assessment, under above sub-sect., at the moment the additional assessment came up for consideration, Schedule E. governed the case, as the effect of the above sub-sect. was to provide that for the purpose of the additional assessment the original assessment must be deemed to have been in accordance with the law as altered by 1922 Act, s. 15 (1), & that sub-sect. having such a retrospective effect the £77 was correctly considered to be omitted from the original assessment & the appeal of the Crown succeeded.—*INGLE v. Effect of Income Tax Act, 1860 (c. 14), s. 6.]—A clerk on the permanent staff of a railway co., paid by a yearly salary, not by weekly wages, & a member of a superannuation scheme under which he may be entitled to a pension, is not the holder of a public office or employment of profit within Schedule E. of the Income Tax Acts, & the co. which employs him is not liable to assessment to income tax under that schedule in respect of such office or employment. Schedule E., r. 3, is to be so read that the whole of it is controlled by the word “public.”

This construction of the rule is not affected by above sect., which makes a railway co. assessable to “the duties payable under Schedule E. in respect of all offices & employments of profit” held in or under the co.—*GREAT WESTERN RY. co. It appeared that there was a sum in hand amounting to £1,172, which was divisible amongst the ordinary shareholders of the co. A resolution was passed at that meeting, which was assented to by all the shareholders of the co., that the chairman & applt. be asked each to accept a moiety of the balance, & that the best thanks of the shareholders were due & were tendered to them for the services they had rendered to the co. throughout its existence & during the winding up. Applt. received a moiety of the balance amounting to the sum of £586. Applt. having been assessed to income tax in respect of that sum appealed:—Held: (1) in order to constitute a voluntary payment a profit accruing by reason of an office within Schedule E. it was not necessary that the office previously to the payment being made should have been an office of profit & there might well be a payment in respect of an office which had been gratuitous up to its termination such as to be a profit by reason of the office; (2) the ct. ought to deal with the appeal on the facts as stated in the case, & ought not to speculate as to whether there might not be something in the relations of the parties & of the co. with other cos. which might throw a different light on the transactions; on the facts as stated, having regard to the important factor that the office had terminated when the payment was made, & to the almost equally important factor that the payment was made, not by the co., but by other persons, the proper & only inference that could be drawn was that the money was paid to applt. after his office had terminated as a tribute or testimonial for his services in the past, & not as a payment for those services; & he was therefore not assessable to income tax in respect of it.—COWAN v. 492. ———.]—Applt., a beneficed clergyman, received for several years an annual grant of money from a diocesan branch affiliated to the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund, a body incorporated with the object of providing adequate remuneration for the beneficed clergy for the work done by them; the fund was not intended to be merely a clerical charity. The funds of the diocesan branch were administered by a council whose aim was to raise the incomes of all benefices under £200 per annum in value to that amount. The council did not take into consideration the personal circumstances of the particular incumbent, but the onus rested upon applt. of deciding whether his own circumstances justified him in applying for a grant. The incumbent of a benefice of less than £200 a year was not necessarily entitled to a grant, but the giving, withholding, continuance, & discontinuance of grants out of the funds were matters wholly within the discretion of the council. Where a benefice fell vacant during the year for which the grant was made, the grant was divided between the outgoing & incoming incumbent in proportion to the length of time for which each had been incumbent:—Held: the grants received by the incumbent from the diocesan branch were “perquisites or profits accruing by reason of his office” within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E., r. 1, & he was therefore liable to pay income tax under Schedule E. upon them.—HERBERT v. MCQUADE, [1902] 2 K. B. 631; 71 L. J. K. B. 884; 87 L. T. 349; 66 J. P. 692; 18 T. L. 493. ———.]—The minister of a chapel received a grant from a fund called the “Minister’s Stipend Augmentation Fund.” That fund was vested in trustees, & managed by a committee. The income of the fund was to be applied by the committee towards the augmentation of the stipends of ministers of such congregations as they might from time to time in their discretion select. Each grant was to be made for the current year only, & in making such grant, regard was to be paid to the state & condition of the congregation, & their ability to make adequate provision for their minister. The private income, the stipend received from the congregation, the age, training, & length of service of each applt. for a grant was also taken into consideration. Each grant was paid half-yearly, & ceased on the death, resignation, or removal of the recipient, & any part of the grant then unpaid was not paid at all either to him or his successor:—Held: the amount of the grant was part of the profits or gains of the minister in his profession or vocation, & he was chargeable with income tax in respect thereof.—POYNTING v. suitable for his duties & approved by his superior officer. He negotiated the sale of a branch of the co.’s business & was granted by the co. the sum of £1,000 “as commission for his services in negotiating the sale.” He was assessed to income tax, Schedule E., in respect of this payment, & appealed against the assessment on the ground that the negotiation of the sale was not part of his duties as secretary & director & that the payment was a voluntary gift which did not constitute a profit for income tax purposes:—Held: the £1,000 was part of the profit of applt.’s office & was accordingly assessable to income tax under Schedule E.—MUDD v. Applt. was assessed to income tax under Schedule E. in respect of the additional remuneration, & the Comrs. upheld the assessment, finding that the additional remuneration was paid to applt. as chairman of the co. for services rendered by him as a director under the provisions of the arts.:—Held: there was evidence to support the finding of the Comrs., & their decision must be affirmed.—BARSON v. 505. “Salary”—Increases not paid person charged—Compulsorily carried to provident fund.]—Under a provident fund scheme at D. The whole of these increases were not to be paid to the masters, but were to be accumulated at compound interest to form the fund. The conditions above referred to were that masters of less than ten years’ service who resigned or ceased to belong to the college from any other cause than ill-health were to be entitled to increase (a) & the accumulations thereof, but not to increase (c); if the master retired from ill-health, the governors in addition to (a) might grant him (c); & in the event of death both (a) & (c) were to be paid to his legal representative. Masters of over ten years’ service were to receive on retirement before the age of sixty the total sum due under (a) or (b) & (c) with accumulations, & in the case of death the same was to be paid to his legal representative. Masters removed for misconduct or, having been guilty of misconduct, allowed to resign were not entitled to (c):—Held: these increases of salary were sums really added to the salary, & were assessable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E.—SMYTH v. STRETTON (1904), 90 L. T. 756; 53 W. R. 288; 20 T. L. R. 443; 48 Sol. Jo. 437; 5 Tax Cas. 36.

Inland Revenue Act, 1876, s. 8, allows an abatement from income tax to a person assessed when “his total income from all sources is less than £400:—Held: the annual value of a manse occupied rent free by the Minister of a congregation of the Free Church of Scotland, the feudal title of which was in trustees for behoof of the congregation, did not fall to be reckoned as “income” of the minister in the sense of the above section.—INLAND REVENUE v. SUTHERLAND (1894), R. (Ct. of Sess.) 753.—SCOT.

co. It appeared that there was a sum in hand amounting to £1,172, which was divisible amongst the ordinary shareholders of the co. A resolution was passed at that meeting, which was assented to by all the shareholders of the co., that the chairman & applt. be asked each to accept a moiety of the balance, & that the best thanks of the shareholders were due & were tendered to them for the services they had rendered to the co. throughout its existence & during the winding up. Applt. received a moiety of the balance amounting to the sum of £586. Applt. having been assessed to income tax in respect of that sum appealed:—Held: (1) in order to constitute a voluntary payment a profit accruing by reason of an office within Schedule E. it was not necessary that the office previously to the payment being made should have been an office of profit & there might well be a payment in respect of an office which had been gratuitous up to its termination such as to be a profit by reason of the office; (2) the ct. ought to deal with the appeal on the facts as stated in the case, & ought not to speculate as to whether there might not be something in the relations of the parties & of the co. with other cos. which might throw a different light on the transactions; on the facts as stated, having regard to the important factor that the office had terminated when the payment was made, & to the almost equally important factor that the payment was made, not by the co., but by other persons, the proper & only inference that could be drawn was that the money was paid to applt. after his office had terminated as a tribute or testimonial for his services in the past, & not as a payment for those services; & he was therefore not assessable to income tax in respect of it.—*COWAN v. 491. ——— Grant to clergy from augmentation fund.]—TURNER v. CUXON, No. 313, ante.

492. ———.]—Applt., a beneficed clergyman, received for several years an annual grant of money from a diocesan branch affiliated to the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund, a body incorporated with the object of providing adequate remuneration for the beneficed clergy for the work done by them; the fund was not intended to be merely a clerical charity. The funds of the diocesan branch were administered by a council whose aim was to raise the incomes of all benefices under £200 per annum in value to that amount. The council did not take into consideration the personal circumstances of the particular incumbent, but the onus rested upon applt. of deciding whether his own circumstances justified him in applying for a grant. The incumbent of a benefice of less than £200 a year was not necessarily entitled to a grant, but the giving, withholding, continuance, & discontinuance of grants out of the funds were matters wholly within the discretion of the council. Where a benefice fell vacant during the year for which the grant was made, the grant was divided between the outgoing & incoming incumbent in proportion to the length of time for which each had been incumbent:—Held: the grants received by the incumbent from the diocesan branch were "perquisites or profits accruing by reason of his office" within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E., r. 1, & he was therefore liable to pay income tax under Schedule E. upon them.—HERBERT v. MCQUADE, [1902] 2 K. B. 631; 71 L. J. K. B. 884; 87 L. T. 349; 66 J. P. 692; 18 T. L. 493. ———.]—The minister of a chapel received a grant from a fund called the "Minister's Stipend Augmentation Fund." That fund was vested in trustees, & managed by a committee. The income of the fund was to be applied by the committee towards the augmentation of the stipends of ministers of such congregations as they might from time to time in their discretion select. Each grant was to be made for the current year only, & in making such grant, regard was to be paid to the state & condition of the congregation, & their ability to make adequate provision for their minister. The private income, the stipend received from the congregation, the age, training, & length of service of each applt. for a grant was also taken into consideration. Each grant was paid half-yearly, & ceased on the death, resignation, or removal of the recipient, & any part of the grant then unpaid was not paid at all either to him or his successor:—Held: the amount of the grant was part of the profits or gains of the minister in his profession or vocation, & he was chargeable with income tax in respect thereof.—POYNTING v. FAULKNER (1905), 93 L. T. 367; 21 T. L. R. 560; 5 Tax Cas. 145, C. A.

494. ——— Collection in church paid to clergy.]—Portions of collections made in a church were paid to the incumbent. They were paid to him by reason of his being incumbent, but they would not have been paid to him if he had not been poor:—Held: he was not assessable to income tax in respect of the amount so received.—*TURTON v. 495. ——— Easter offerings to clergy.]—Voluntary Easter offerings of money given as a freewill gift to the incumbent of a benefice as such for his personal use are, if given for the purpose of increasing his stipend, assessable to income tax as "profits accruing to him by reason of his office" under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E., r. 1.—BLAKISTON v. COOPER, [1909] A. C. 104; 78 L. J. K. B. 135; 100 L. T. 51; 25 T. L. R.

1. ——— Allowance to detective for plain clothes.]—A detective officer received, in addition to his pay, a money allowance with which he was bound to purchase plain clothes suitable for his duties & approved by his superior officer. The detective received the same pay as an ordinary policeman of a similar grade, but, whereas the ordinary policeman received his uniform free, the detective received the money allowance in lieu thereof:—Held: the allowance paid to the detective was a profit accruing to him by reason of an office or ment under a public corp'n. within Income Tax Act, 1842, Schedule (E.), & accordingly was subject to income tax.—FREGGUSON v. NOBLE, [1911] S. C. 534; 7 Tax Cas.

497. ——— Remuneration of trustee of settlement—Payable out of income of trust.]—Applt. was appointed a trustee under a deed of settlement by the terms of which he was entitled to remuneration for his services at the rate of £100 per annum, that remuneration being payable out of the income arising from the trust funds:—Held: the sum of £100 was an “annual payment” payable wholly out of profits or gains brought into charge to tax within All Schedules Rules, r. 19, & was not a payment in respect of an employment so as to be the subject of direct assessment under Schedule D., Case II.—BAXENDALE v. MURPHY, [1924] 2 K. B. 494; 93 L. J. K. B. 974; 132 L. T. 490; 40 T. L. R. 784; 69 Sol. Jo. 12; 9 Tax Cas. 76.

498. ——— Commission paid to salaried officer—For negotiating sale of part of business.]—Applt., an incorporated accountant, was secretary & director of a co. & received a salary as such. He negotiated the sale of a branch of the co.’s business & was granted by the co. the sum of £1,000 “as commission for his services in negotiating the sale.” He was assessed to income tax, Schedule E., in respect of this payment, & appealed against the assessment on the ground that the negotiation of the sale was not part of his duties as secretary & director & that the payment was a voluntary gift which did not constitute a profit for income tax purposes:—Held: the £1,000 was part of the profit of applt.’s office & was accordingly assessable to income tax under Schedule E.—MUDD v. COLLINS (1925), 133 L. T. 186; 41 T. L. R. 358; 69 Sol. Jo. 490; 9 Tax Cas. 297.

500. ——— Additional remuneration—For additional services.]—Applt., who was the chairman of the directors of a London co. with interests in China, paid visits to China on behalf of the co., & in addition to his fees as chairman, was awarded by the directors remuneration for his services there. This award was made under the arts. of assocn., which provided that if any director agreed to go abroad & perform extra services he was to receive remuneration therefor. Applt. was assessed to income tax under Schedule E. in respect of the additional remuneration, & the Comrs. upheld the assessment, finding that the additional remuneration was paid to applt. as chairman of the co. for services rendered by him as a director under the provisions of the arts.:—Held: there was evidence to support the finding of the Comrs., & their decision must be affirmed.—BARSON v. 502. ——— Proceeds of benefit match—Professional cricketer.]—Held: the proceeds of a professional cricketer’s benefit match do not constitute an income, profit, or gain, but a mere present not assessable to income tax.—REED v. SEYMOUR (1926), 42 T. L. R. 377; reversd. 161 L. T. Jo. 388, C. A.

503. “Perquisites or profits”—Occupation of house—Whether profits restricted to money payments.]—TENNANT v. SMITH, No. 87, ante.

504. ——— Commission on profits—General manager of company.]—Applt., whose remuneration as general manager of a limited co. consisted partly of a fixed annual salary & partly of a commission or bonus on the co.’s net profits, had been assessed to income tax under Schedule E., r. 1, for the years 1914–15 to 1917–18 on the basis of the total amount of salary & commission or bonus received or receivable by him from the co. in respect of each of those years:—Held: the commission or bonus on net profits fell within the definition of the expression “perquisites” in Schedule E., r. 4, & was assessable to income tax under Schedule E., not on the basis of the actual sum received as commission in the year of assessment, as provided by rule 1 of the schedule, but on the basis of the average amounts in the three preceding years, as provided by rule 4.—M’DONALD v. SHAND, [1923] A. C. 337; 92 L. J. P. O. 174; 129 L. T. 641; 39 T. L. R. 444; 67 Sol. Jo. 516; 8 Tax Cas. 420, H. L.

505. “Salary”—Increases not paid person charged—Compulsorily carried to provident fund.]—Under a provident fund scheme at D. College the following increases of salaries came into operation: (a) assistant masters having not less than five, but less than fifteen years’ service, an increase of 5 per cent.; (b) those having fifteen years’ & over, 7½ per cent.; (c) a further addition equal to those sums subject to certain conditions. The whole of these increases were not to be paid to the masters, but were to be accumulated at compound interest to form the fund. The conditions above referred to were that masters of less than ten years’ service who resigned or ceased to belong to the college from any other cause than ill-health were to be entitled to increase (a) & the accumulations thereof, but not to increase (c); if the master retired from ill-health, the governors in addition to (a) might grant him (c); & in the event of death both (a) & (c) were to be paid to his legal representative. Masters of over ten years’ service were to receive on retirement before the age of sixty the total sum due under (a) or (b) & (c) with accumulations, & in the case of death the same was to be paid to his legal representative. Masters removed for misconduct or, having been guilty of misconduct, allowed to resign were not entitled to (c):—Held: these increases of salary were sums really added to the salary, & were assessable to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E.—SMYTH v. STRETTON (1904), 90 L. T. 756; 53 W. R. 288; 20 T. L. R. 443; 48 Sol. Jo. 437; 5 Tax Cas. 36.

Under the terms of their employment, the institution provided them with board, lodging, washing & uniform for which they were required to pay amounts varying with the cost of living, such amounts being deducted from their gross salaries before payment. The General Comrs. held, on appeal, that only the net amounts received in cash were assessable to income tax:—Held: the husband was assessable to income tax in respect of the gross amount of the remuneration of himself & his wife without any deduction for the amounts paid in respect of the board, lodging, etc., provided by the institution.—*CORDY v. 519. Expenses incidental to performance of office—Limited to necessary expenses actually incurred.]—Rule 9 of Rules applicable to Schedule E. provides for the deduction from the emoluments of an office for the purposes of assessment to income tax of travelling expenses which the holder of the office is necessarily obliged to incur in the performance of the duties of the office & of other expenses incurred "wholly, exclusively, & necessarily" in performance of those duties. The expenses contemplated by the rule are only those which the holder of the office is obliged to incur by the fact that he holds the office & has to perform its duties & are incurred actually in the course of the performance of those duties. Expenses which result from the holder's volition to live away from the place where the work of his office has to be performed do not come within the rule.

The recorder of a borough is not entitled to deduct from the amount of his salary for the purposes of its assessments to income tax under Schedule E. travelling expenses between the place where he resides or practises as a barrister & the borough where he sits as recorder, such expenses being incurred on his visits to hold quarter sessions, nor is he entitled to deduct his hotel expenses during his stay in the borough for that purpose, since these expenses are not necessarily incurred & defrayed in the performance of the duties of his office within the meaning of the above rule.—*RICKETTS v. 527. — Subscription to professional association—Membership voluntary but customary.]—

A county medical officer claimed to deduct his subscriptions to certain professional societies in the computation of his liability to income tax under Schedule E. in respect of his salary. It was not a condition of his employment that he should be a member of these societies, but such membership is customary for county medical officers. The Special Comrs., on appeal, allowed the deductions sought:—Held: the subscriptions in question were not expenses wholly, exclusively & necessarily incurred in the performance of the duties of the office of county medical officer, & they were accordingly not admissible deductions in computing his liability to income tax.—SIMPSON v. TATE, [1925] 2 K. B. 214; 94 L. J. K. B. 817; 133 L. T. 187; 41 T. L. R. 370; 69 Sol. Jo. 460; 9 Tax Cas. 314.

528. Previous losses in business—Business converted into company—Former owner appointed managing director.]—In assessing salary under Schedule E. the average of three years is not to be taken.

A person who had made losses in his business, converted it into a limited co. & was appointed managing director at a salary. He was assessed to income tax under Schedule E. for this salary, but claimed to be allowed to set off against it the average loss incurred in the three previous years when the business was his own:—Held: he was not entitled to set off such loss.—BRAY v. BROTHERS (1897), 13 T. L. R. 325; 3 Tax Cas. 550, D. C.

529. "Sum chargeable by virtue of any Act of Parliament"—Contribution to superannuation or provident fund—Deduction imposed by statute.]—Appl., who was clerk to the guardians of a union, & to the assessment & school attendance committees, was assessed in respect of his salary, under Schedule E., on a net amount of £289. He contributed annually under Poor Law Officers Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 12, for the purposes of that Act, a sum of £15 10s., which was deducted from his salary under that sect. He claimed to deduct this sum from the amount on which he was assessed, by virtue of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, Sched. E., r. 1, by which duty is payable on salaries, etc., "after deducting the amount of duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament":—Held: the amount contributed by applt., under Poor Law Officers Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), came within the words "duties or other sums payable or chargeable by virtue of any Act of Parliament," in Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 146, & therefore he was entitled to the deduction claimed.—*BEAUMONT v. providing a sum of money which, in the event of the retirement or death of any person in the service of the corpn., who had contributed to the fund, should be available for himself or his representatives, & to frame a scheme for that purpose. By a scheme framed by the corpn. in pursuance of the Act, it was provided that persons in the service of the corpn. should respectively contribute to the fund a certain percentage of their salaries, to be from time to time deducted from those salaries by the corpn. In accordance with the requirements of the Act, the scheme provided that the amount so contributed by each contributor should be repaid with interest to him, upon his retirement from the service of the corpn., or in the event of his "death in that service," to his personal representatives:—Held: amounts deducted in pursuance of the scheme from the salaries of persons in the service of the corpn. did not come within the words "sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament where the same are really & bonâ fide paid & borne by the party to be charged," & therefore they could not be deducted from the amounts of the salaries for the purpose of assessment to income tax under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), Sched. 531. ——— Membership of fund voluntary—Fund applicable for benefit of wife & issue.]—The East London College adopted a superannuation scheme & invited the members of their existing staff to join it. The principal of the college joined the scheme. The college in accordance with the scheme deducted from his salary of £1,000 £50 per annum, being 5 per cent. of his salary of £1,000 per annum, & provided a further sum of £50, which was added to the deduction from the principal's salary & accumulated with similar sums deducted from the other members of the staff who joined the scheme & held by the college in accordance with the trusts set out in the scheme, namely, to apply the accumulated funds for the benefit of the member his wife & issue or any of them or partly in one way or partly in another as the institution should in their uncontrolled discretion think proper. The principal, having been assessed to income tax in the sum of £1,000, in respect of his salary, appealed against his assessment on the ground that the sum of £50, being the amount of the contribution to the superannuation scheme, should not be reckoned as part of his income or should be deducted from his income for income tax purposes:—Held: in law the principal of the college must be held to have received the £50 deducted from his salary, inasmuch as the fact that a taxpayer did not actually receive a sum which was a profit or gain was for income tax purposes immaterial, & also what the taxpayer did with the sum or agreed to do with it was equally immaterial.—*BRUCE v. He also claimed & was allowed by the General Comrs., on appeal, under the same rule, a deduction of one-eighth of the rates & inhabited house duty paid by him upon the vicarage:—Held: rates & inhabited house duty do not fall within the term "rent" or "annual value" in the said rule, & there was no title to any deduction in respect of such payments.—*BUTCHER v. In order to preserve the assets of the business the trustees under the will required the partners to enter into an agreement under which a certain percentage of the net profit of the business was to be set aside in each half-year to create a reserve fund to meet any losses arising out of the business. Subject to that condition the reserve fund remained the property of the partners:—Held: the sum set aside was an annual payment reserved or charged upon the net profits of the partnership whereby the income of each of the partners is diminished.—STOCKER v. 541. Calculation of relief—Where income from shares in public companies—Position of companies in relation to shareholders—Effect of change in rate of tax.]—Applt.'s sole income for the year ended Apr. 5, 1923, was derived from interest & dividends on stocks & shares in public cos., which having paid income tax on their profits, had made proportionable deductions from the dividends paid to applt. Applt. claimed relief & was repaid £61 17s. 6d., being 5s. in the pound (the full rate of tax for the year) on the first £135, & 2s. 6d. in the pound on the next £225. He now claimed to be entitled to repayment of the amount by which the aggregate amount of the tax deducted by the cos. exceeded the amount of income tax which would have been payable by him for the year in question upon the income actually received by him in that year:—Held: the cos. being taxable on their profits & not as agents for the shareholders, & there being no provision for the return of any of the tax to the shareholder save in the process of giving effect to deductions & reliefs, applt.'s contention failed.

There does exist, however, a question upon the operation of these deductions & reliefs in cases where a change in the rate of tax has produced a state of figures such as exists in applt.'s case, namely, whether in according the refunds the current rate is to be applied though the income to be exonerated from tax has in fact borne tax at an earlier & different rate, or, taken as a whole, at a rate averaged between the current & such earlier rate. The taxation which I uphold in dismissing this appeal proceeds upon this principle, & it might be thought that my decision affirms it. I must make it clear that it does not. The point was not in question before the comrs. It was not raised by the case stated. Applt., confident in a larger proposition, said he did not argue it, & the necessary figures are not before me. If the point is ever discussed the principle on which tax is added for super-tax purposes may fall to be considered with it (ROWLATT, J.).—RITSON v. PHILLIPS (1924), 131 L. 542. Statutory exemption from parliamentary tax—Local Act—Exemption after income tax instituted—Whether tax annual or continuing.]—Resps., the conservators of the river Thames claimed exemption under Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), s. 289, from the payment of income tax for the years 1905 & 1906 in respect of properties within the sect. The surveyor of taxes contended that, income tax being an annual tax, the income tax for the years 1905 & 1906 was not a tax existing at the date of the passing of the Act, & that resps. were, therefore, not entitled to the exemption claimed:—Held: though income

c. tax is in form an annual tax, the income tax payable in the years subsequent to 1894 must, for the purpose of the exemption, be deemed to be a tax which was existing at the date of the passing of the Act, & resps. were, therefore, entitled to the exemption claimed.—STEWART v. 543. Exemption granted before income tax instituted.—A ferry was established by & maintained under 30 Geo. 3, c. 61, which was to be deemed to be a public Act, & contained a provision that the then proprietors, or their respective heirs or assigns, "shall not be rated or assessed for or toward the payment of any tax, rate, or assessment whatsoever, parliamentary or parochial, for or in respect of the said ferry. . . .":—Held: the exemption granted by the statute extended to parliamentary taxes whether in existence at the date of the Act or not, & therefore included income tax, although that tax was first imposed subsequently to the passing of the Act.—POLE-CAREW v. CRADDOCK, [1920] 3 K. B. 109; 89 L. J. K. B. 507; 123 L. T. 309; 36 T. L. R. 447; 7 Tax Cas. 488, C. A.

544. Statutory exemption from all taxes—Public general Act—Act inconsistent with Income Tax Acts.—(1) By sect. 1 of a special Act of Parliament passed in 1871 (34 Vict. c. 1), it was provided that an annuity of £6,000 per annum for life should be settled upon Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, "to commence from the date of the marriage of Her Royal Highness with John Douglas Sutherland Campbell aforesaid (now the Duke of Argyll) to be free from all taxes, assessments, & charges." The Duke of Argyll was assessed for super tax under Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), on the grounds that the income of his wife was a sum exceeding £5,000, & he paid the sum demanded for the three years, 1910, 1911, & 1912 "as a matter of grace," when he appealed against the assessment. The assessment was afterwards affirmed by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue. On a case stated, it was contended on behalf of applt. that the grant which was made under the special Act of 1871 "free from all taxes, assessments, & charges" exempted the same from charges of any kind whatsoever, in spite of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 187, which enacted that any future Act of Parliament conferring an exemption from "taxes" should not include income tax, as Parliament could not pass an Act fettering the sovereignty of Parliament in its future Acts, & that any future Parliament could abrogate the same. On behalf of the Crown it was contended that "all taxes" in the Act of 1871 meant all taxes except income tax, & that the super tax was simply an additional income tax:—Held: as the two Acts of 1842 & 1871 were inconsistent in their terms, the later Act, which freed the grant from "all taxes," must prevail, & the Comrs. of Inland Revenue had arrived at an erroneous conclusion.

545. Relief in respect of income accumulated under trust—Date of vesting.—Testatrix who died in 1904 bequeathed her residuary estate on trust, after payment of a weekly sum to each of three granddaughters, of whom resp. was one, to accumulate the surplus income thereof until the youngest of the said granddaughters should attain the age of 30, when the capital & accumulated income were to be held on trust for the three granddaughters in equal shares. The will provided that the interest of each granddaughter should be absolutely vested at the age of 21 or marriage & settled it on her for life. Resp. married on Mar. 31, 1906, & the youngest granddaughter attained the age of 30 on Aug. 11, 1918. & as from the latter date resp. was paid the income arising from her share of the capital & accumulations. On Apr. 4, 1922, resp. preferred a claim under 1918 Act, s. 25, for repayment of the income tax paid or deducted in respect of her share of the income accumulated from Apr. 6, 1904, to Aug. 1918, & this was allowed by the General Comrs. on appeal:—Held: so far as resp. was concerned, the contingency contemplated by sect. 25 had happened in 1906, when her interest under the will became absolutely vested on her marriage, & she was accordingly not entitled to relief under the said sect.—STONELEY v. AMBROSE (1925), 133 L. T. 233; 9 Tax Cas. 389.

estate under Schedule A. & he claimed that in addition to the repayment of the whole of the income tax, Schedule A., paid on the estate he was entitled to repayment against his other taxed income of tax on the amount by which the excess of maintenance, etc., exceeded the net annual value of the estate:—Held: the relief to which he was entitled was limited to repayment of the amount of income tax paid by him under the Schedule A. assessments on the estate concerned.—CROMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 550. What is "premium or other payment"—Lump sum paid in commutation.]—Applt. had taken out a policy of insurance on his life &, after paying the annual premiums thereunder for some years, entered into an arrangement with the insurance co. under which he made a lump sum payment in consideration of a reduction in the amount of future annual premiums. He claimed that he was entitled for income tax purposes to an allowance of the amount (including this lump sum payment) actually paid by him in the year "on a policy for securing a capital sum at death," so long as such amount did not exceed one-sixth of his net income, & 7 per cent. if the capital sum assured under the terms of the policy:—Held: the words "premium or other payment" in Finance Act, 1915 (c. 62), s. 17 (1), did not in any way extend the allowance granted by Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 54, & a lump sum paid in commutation of future annual premiums was not an annual premium within Income Tax Act, 1853 (c. 34), s. 54.—TURTON v. O'BRIEN (1919), 7 Tax Cas. 170.

See, now, 1918 Act, s. 32 (1), as amended by 1920 Act, s. 26 (1).

551. Limitation of allowance—Insurance made "after June 22, 1916"—Fresh policy taken out in different policy—Former policy allowed to lapse.]—Resp., on Nov. 30, 1915, took out with the S. Life Assurance Co. an ordinary whole life policy, insuring the payment of £10,000 on his death, at an annual premium of £350. On Aug. 29, 1916, he took out with the R. Assurance Corpn. another similar policy for £10,000, at an annual premium of £338 6s. 8d., & on Nov. 30, 1916, i.e. after a period of about three months during which he had been insured under both policies, he allowed the earlier policy to lapse. For the purpose of the second policy resp. made a fresh proposal & declaration & underwent a fresh medical examination:—Held: the policy effected with the R. Assurance Corpn. was a fresh contract of insurance made after June 22, 1916, &, in view of 1918 Act, s. 32 (3) (e) (i), an allowance in respect of the premiums payable thereunder could not be granted for income tax purposes for the year ended Apr. 5, 1920, at a greater rate than 3s. in the pound.—*BARTON (H.M. 552. Right of preference shareholders to relief.]—A co. registered in the United Kingdom but carrying on business in South Africa paid United Kingdom income tax on its profits at the rate of 5s. in the pound, & under Finance Act, 1916 (c. 24), s. 43, received repayment of part of the United Kingdom tax at the rate of 1s. 6d. in the pound in respect of South African income tax paid on the same profits. The co. having declared a dividend on its preference shares deducted 5s. in the pound from the dividends in respect of United Kingdom income tax:—Held: (1) on the declaration of the dividend the co. was bound to pay the whole to the preference shareholders, less only such deduction as was authorised by Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 54; (2) under that sect. "duty charged" meant duty paid; (3) under the combined effect of Finance Act, 1916 (c. 24), s. 43, & Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 54, the only deduction the shareholder was bound by statute to allow was a deduction of what the co. was actually out of pocket by the payment on his account of British income tax.—*ROVER v. Sect. 3.—Relief in respect of Dominion income tax.

Sect. 4. Part VIII. Sect. 1: Sub-sect. 1.]

554. — Effect of 1920 Act, s. 27 (5).]—A co. incorporated under Cos. Acts & carrying on business in the United Kingdom & the Colonies claimed the right to deduct from the dividends of the preference shareholders income tax at the full rate, without granting relief from that tax corresponding with that to which the co. was entitled under 1920 Act, s. 27, in respect of Dominion income tax:—Held: 1920 Act, s. 27 (5), did not, notwithstanding the apparent generality of the language of that sub-sect., entitle the preference shareholders to payment of their dividends without deduction of income tax therefrom at a rate exceeding the United Kingdom income tax as reduced by the relief from that tax conferred upon the co. under 1920 Act, s. 27, in respect of any payment by the co. of Dominion income tax; & accordingly, the co. were entitled to deduct from those dividends the full rate of United Kingdom income tax.—*WAKEFIELD v. 557. Tax on profits on Colonial branch business —Branch formerly run at loss.]—By 1920 Act, s. 27 (1), "If any person who has paid, by deduction or otherwise, or is liable to pay, United Kingdom income tax for any year of assessment on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Special Comrs. that he has paid Dominion income tax for that year in respect of the same part of his income, he shall be entitled to relief from United Kingdom income tax paid or payable by him on that part of his income" at a certain rate. Applt. co. had its chief seat of business in England, but it had branches in India & Australia. It was assessed to British income tax on the whole of its profits, wherever made. The assessment for the year ending Apr. 5, 1921, was £261,711, which was based on the average profits for the three years to Oct. 31, 1919, & £250,000 for the year ending Apr. 5, 1922, on the average profits for the three years to Oct. 31, 1920. For the three years to Sept. 30, 1919, there was an average loss on the Indian business of £2,454, & for the three years to Sept. 30, 1920, there was an average loss on the Indian business of £483. The accounts of the Indian branch to Sept. 30 in each year were incorporated in the accounts of applt. co. for the year ending Oct. 31 following. The Indian income tax year ending on Mar. 31. For the years ending Mar. 31, 1921, & Mar. 31, 1922, the basis of assessment to Indian income tax was the amount of the profits of the year of assessment. The co. was assessed to Indian income tax for the year ending Mar. 31, 1921, in the sum of £4,120, & the tax paid thereon was £257 10s. 1d. For the year ending Mar. 31, 1922, the assessment was in the sum of £14,543, & the income tax & super tax paid thereon amounted to £1,896 5s. 4d.:—Held: though appls. would be entitled to relief in respect of British income tax paid or payable by them on their Indian income in the year of assessment, yet, since by reason of the Indian business having made a loss on the average of the three years they had not in fact paid, & were not liable to pay, British income tax on their Indian income in the year of assessment, they were not entitled to relief.—*ROLLS-ROYCE, LTD. v. 561. — Who are agents — Custodian under Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914 (c. 12).]—Property belonging to an enemy which is paid to or vested in the custodian under above Act is, pending its disposition by Ord. in Council after the termination of the war, removed from the control & beneficial ownership of the enemy. During the interval the beneficial ownership is in statutory suspense or abeyance, the custodian having meanwhile limited powers of dealing with the property. When war broke out in 1914, M., an enemy within the Act, owned real estate in England & shares & securities in British cos. By orders under sect. 4 of the Act the real estate, shares & securities were vested in the custodian. The Special Comrs. for Income Tax assessed the custodian to super tax as agent or receiver for M. The custodian disputed the legality of the assessment:—Held: M.'s beneficial ownership of the property having ceased on the making of the vesting orders, the profits & gains received by the custodian were received by him in respect of M., but did not in his hands belong to M.; he did not receive or hold them as agent or receiver or trustee for M. within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 41; &, therefore, he was not liable to be assessed to super tax; but, as M. could not, after the war, ask to receive back the property except on the footing that a sum equal to the amount of super tax which, but for the war, he would have been liable to pay was paid, the custodian must, under the discretion given to the ct. by sub-sect. 1 of Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914 (c. 12), s. 5, pay that sum (the amount to be agreed) to the comrs. as analogous to payment of a debt under sub-sect. 2.—Re MUNSTER, [1920] 1 Ch. 268; 89 L. There was no written agreement between the cos. & specific instructions were given on each occasion. The Danish co. also employed other brokers & the English co. acted for many other shipowners. Two of the Danish co.'s steamers were torpedoed &, as requested by that co., the English co. collected the insurance moneys & placed them on deposit with a London bank in a special account opened in their own name, but earmarked to the Danish co. Owing to wartime difficulties of communication the English co. was given authority to withdraw the money. The interest on the deposit was credited by the bank to the English co. No remuneration was paid to the English co. in respect of the transaction. Assessments to Income Tax were made upon the Danish co. in the name of the English co. in respect of such interest. The English co. appealed, contending that they had acted merely as brokers for the Danish co., &, in view of General Rules applicable to all schedules, r. 10, could not be assessed on behalf of that co. The General Comrs., discharged the assessments, deciding that, while the interest was assessable income of the Danish co., that co. was not assessable in the name of the English co.:—Held: the English co. was assessable in respect of the interest as the agent of the Danish co.—*SCALES v. The suppliant admitted that such deduction was right, but contended that by virtue of the first proviso to sect. 45 of Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), she was not chargeable with income tax, & that, therefore, she was entitled to repayment by the Crown of the sums deducted:—Held: the first proviso to sect. 45 of Income Tax Act, 1845 (c. 35), applied to taxation by assessment on the person & not to taxation by the deduction of the tax at the source; the suppliant, therefore, was not entitled to any repayment.—PURDIE v. 577. When Act not yet passed—Right to demand returns for purposes of super-tax—Interpretation of Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72 (3).]—The super-tax on incomes over £5,000 a year, first imposed by Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 66, & then only for the financial year beginning Apr. 6, 1909, is additional income tax, & one of the “duties of income tax” within those words in Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1890 (c. 8), s. 30, & therefore, in order to ensure the collection in due time of super-tax granted for any financial year commencing on Apr. 6, statutory provisions relating to income tax in force on the preceding day have effect with respect to the tax so granted as if the tax had been actually imposed by Act of Parliament & the statutory provisions had been applied thereto by that Act.

Returns with a view to assessing super-tax may, therefore, be required, although no Act of the financial year imposing the tax has been passed, if, as is usual, there was an Act as to collection in force on Apr. 5.

PART VIII. SECT. 2.

*m. When Act not yet passed.]—*In 1910 resp. co. purchased certain timber limits in British Columbia at the price of $87,500. In 1917 they sold a portion of the timber, & in 1920 they sold the balance of the timber at the rate of $4 per 1,000 feet for a guaranteed minimum payment of $180,000, to be paid as to $80,000 on the date of contract, upon payment of which a clear title was to be given, & the balance by two payments of $50,000 each in Jan. 1921 & 1922. The profit of $130,001.08 as shown by the adjustment of the figures was transferred in an “undivided profits account” to the credit of the shareholders’ accounts as being a “profit on sale of capital assets.” In making their return for income tax for 1921 under Income & Personal Property Taxation Act, 1921, of British Columbia, resp. co. took the view that the whole profit on the transactions was merely an enhancement of capital has been passed, the revenue authority can assess & demand payment of it.

Super-tax was imposed for the financial year beginning Apr. 6, 1910, by Finance Act, 1910 (c. 35), s. 3, which provided that enactments relating to super-tax in force with respect to the tax granted for the year beginning Apr. 6, 1909, should have effect with respect to the tax granted by the Finance Act, 1910 (c. 35). Revenue Act, 1911 (c. 2), passed in Mar. 1911, contained provisions with respect to super-tax, but did not impose the tax for the financial year beginning Apr. 6, 1911. Before any Act imposing super-tax for that year had been passed the revenue authorities demanded from pltf. returns of his income under Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72 (2), for the purpose of assessing the tax:—Held: the demand was lawful.

Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72 (3), shows that the Act was not intended to regulate the collection of super-tax for the financial year 1909 only, but also its collection for subsequent financial years.—*BOWLES v. Although above sect. keeps alive the machinery of the Income Tax Acts & enables the officials charged with the collection of income tax to carry out all the preliminary work necessary for the collection & assessment of any income tax which may be imposed for any financial year, it does not authorise any assessment or collection of income tax not yet imposed by Act of Parliament:—Held: the Bank of England were not entitled to deduct any sum in respect of income tax from dividends due on Govt. that the assessor had no authority to make any assessment in respect of money received before the statute of 1921 was passed. The assessor appealed by special leave:—Held: the sum of $130,001.08 was not taxable because it was merely an estimate conditional upon the eventual pay-the year.”]—A co. applied under Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 133, for a return of duties paid for three successive preceding years, & after hearing evidence the district Comrs. amended the assessment for these years, & issued three certificates to the Special Comrs. certifying the amount so overpaid. The special comrs. had laid down an office rule that no such application should be heard or certificate would be acted on by them where the application was made more than a year after the year current at the time of making the assessment, & issued their order in accordance with such rule for repayment of the amount overpaid in the last year, & refused to do so in respect of the two preceding years:—Held: (1) a mandamus was the proper remedy to compel the Special Comrs. to issue orders for the repayment of the two last mentioned amounts; (2) the words “at the end of the year” in sect. 133 do not mean either at any time after the end of the year or any fixed period within which any particular case must be found & proved, but as soon after the end of the year as any person by the use of due exertion could, having regard to the circumstances of each particular case, have found & proved the overpayment; (3) jurisdiction is given to the district Comrs. by sect. 133 to decide whether each particular case has been found & proved within the time fixed by the sect. as interpreted by the Ct. & there is no appeal from such decision.—*R. v. ment of the whole sums which would become due under the agreement; but the $66,269.28 being the amount of the supplementary assessment, was taxable as being the profit realised in the period embraced in the assessment.—R. v. ANDERSON LOGGING CO., LTD. (1925), 134 L. T. 386.—CAN.

586. Jurisdiction of general commissioners—Where no determination of original assessment—Appeal withdrawn.]—A public house let as a tied house at £30 per annum was originally assessed to income tax under Schedule A. for the year ending Apr. 5, 1911, at £35. An appeal by the owner against this assessment was withdrawn on its coming before the comrs. on Oct. 5, 1911. On July 22, 1912, an additional first assessment of £10 for the same year was made, & an appeal came before the comrs. on Nov. 14, 1912. At this time an appeal to the assessment committee was pending against the poor rate assessment made in Oct. 1912, fixing the gross estimated rental at £45. At the hearing on Nov. 14, 1912, the comrs. decided that, subject to any amendment as the result of the pending appeal to the assessment committee; £45 should be adopted as the annual value as being the rack rent at which the premises were worth to be let by the year in the market to a free tenant. The appeal against the poor rate assessment was dismissed on Nov. 19, 1912, & on Dec. 5, 1912, the comrs. confirmed the additional first assessment to income tax. On an appeal against their decision:—Held: (1) the appeal against the original first assessment had never been determined on Oct. 5, 1911, so as finally to determine the assessment under Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), s. 57 (10), the appeal having been withdrawn; (2) the comrs. had not allowed themselves to be controlled by the poor rate assessment, but had merely had regard to it, as they were entitled to do; (3) as the result of the additional first assessment was to raise the annual value of the premises to the correct amount, it was immaterial whether, owing to an incorrect return of profits under Schedule D., the increase in the annual value would result in a double assessment.

Even if it were true that applt. had been assessed to a higher amount than she need have been under Schedule D., because she did not at the proper time claim a deduction to which she was entitled, that is not a matter which we can take into consideration at all in arriving at a conclusion as to whether the additional assessment was properly made upon her in respect of Schedule A. (SWINFEN EADY, L.J.).—GUNDRY v. DUNHAM (1915), 85 L. J. K. B. 417; 114 L. T. 106; 82 T. L. R. 142; 7 Tax Cas. 12 C. A.

588. Jurisdiction of additional commissioners—When arising—Existing return “discovered” by surveyor to be insufficient—Whether return must be insufficient in fact.]—(1) Under Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), ss. 52, 57 (2), coupled with the Income Tax Acts, the surveyor has jurisdiction to report if he “discovers,” i.e. if he honestly comes to the conclusion upon the information in his possession, that a person chargeable has not made a full & proper return to income tax, & the additional comrs. have jurisdiction then to make an additional assessment upon that person which is binding unless challenged by the means prescribed under the statutes.

(2) The decision of the additional comrs. can only be challenged by an appeal to the general comrs. under Taxes Management Act, 1880 (c. 19), s. 57 (3), whose decision is final subject to the right of the person assessed to require the statement of a case for the opinion of the High Ct. upon questions of law under sect. 59 (1) of the Act.

(3) A writ of prohibition will not be granted to restrain the comrs. from proceeding upon the assessment unless it can be shown that there were no grounds upon which the surveyor or comrs. could honestly have believed that the person assessed is chargeable.—*R. v. 589. —Where person not resident in their district.]—The additional comrs. for the Income Tax Acts in the district of A. in Sept. 1915, made an additional assessment upon S. in respect of dividends received by him, from an American co. S. having obtained a rule nisi for a prohibition to the general comrs. of the district directing them not to proceed in the assessment on the ground that he was not ordinarily resident in their district within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 106:—Held: since the facts as to S.'s residence were clearly established, & that if an appeal were taken to the general comrs. they would be bound to decide that S.'s ordinary place of residence was not at any material time within the district, the rule nisi must be made absolute, as the comrs. had exceeded their jurisdiction in making the assessment.—*R. v. 590. — Effect of assessment—Whether person assessed “charged to income tax.”—On Mar. 30, 1915, an additional assessment to income tax was made upon S. by the additional comrs. for the district in which he resided in respect of dividends received by him in England from an American company. Notice of the assessment was given to S. on Oct. 19, 1915, & on Oct. 26 he obtained a rule nisi to prohibit the general comrs. for the district from proceeding upon the assessment on the ground that by Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 108, the assessment could only be made by the comrs. for Bristol, that being the nearest of the four places mentioned in the sect. to the place where S. resided. Cause was shown against the rule on Jan. 13, 1916:—Held: inasmuch as the assessment made upon S. by the additional comrs. had not been allowed or confirmed by the general comrs., he had not been effectively “charged” to income tax within Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 32 (1), & the rule nisi for a prohibition must be made absolute.—*R. v. 595. — No evidence in support of appeal.—The accounts of applt. firm for the purposes of income tax for certain years had been prepared by an accountant who was subsequently discredited; the accounts in question were consequently not accepted & additional assessments in estimated amounts were raised upon applt. firm for the years affected. The firm appealed against these assessments to the general comrs., contending that the returns as made by the accountant should be accepted, but they produced no evidence in support of the appeal & admitted that the relevant account books had been destroyed. The general comrs. thereupon confirmed the assessments:—Held: in the absence of evidence in support of the appeal, the comrs. were right in confirming the additional assessments.—TUDOR & ONIONS v. DUCKER (H.M. INSPECTOR OF TAXES) (1924), 8 Tax Cas. 591.

596. Jurisdiction of special commissioners—To increase assessment.—Before the year 1910 the owner of applt.'s business had in his employment his three sons, each of whom was paid a salary of £150. In 1910 an agreement was entered into by the father with his sons whereby each of the latter received 25 per cent. of the net profits; but the sons were not taken into partnership, & they continued to hold subordinate positions in the business. From 1912 the profits greatly increased, & large sums were paid to the sons. In assessing the profits of the business to excess profits duty the Inland Revenue Comrs. disallowed as a deduction the difference between the sums paid to the sons in the last pre-war year & those paid to them in each of the three accounting years 1914–16. On appeal to the special comrs., £250 of the amount paid to each son was held to be the full amount which was wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade or business, the balance being disallowed as a deduction. The effect of this was to increase the amount of the assessable profits. On appeal:—Held: (1) the special comrs. had jurisdiction to increase the assessment; (2) they were entitled to say what amount of the share of the profits paid to the sons should be allowed to be deducted as their remuneration for the time & labour expended by them in the business.—*JOHNSON BROTHERS & CO. v. 600. The hearing—Whether appellant entitled to be heard on oath.]—Applt. appealed against his assessment for income tax. He sent in a schedule of accounts, & on appearing before the special comrs., tendered himself for examination on oath for the purpose of verifying his schedule. The comrs. refused to put him upon oath, & upon the evidence before them confirmed the assessment. Applt. obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the comrs. to hear & determine the matter, or to state a special case:—Held: the decision of the comrs. was a decision merely on a question of fact; but, assuming that there was a point of law in applt.'s contention that the comrs. were bound to put him on oath, & that his oath as to the correctness of his schedule would be conclusive, nevertheless it was not one in respect of which the ct. ought to grant a mandamus.—*R. v. He attended & gave evidence before the comrs., & his solr. then stated that he wished to call an expert valuer. The comrs. said they already had all the facts before them & did not think any further evidence would assist them, & they declined to hear the expert. A rule nisi was then obtained calling upon the comrs. to show cause why they should not hear & determine the appeal according to law:—Held: mandamus would not lie for the purpose of appealing from the comrs.' decision as to the non-necessity of hearing the evidence tendered, & the rule should therefore be discharged.—*R. v. Subsequently, & before the case was signed & filed, resp. died. A copy of the case when signed was served on resp.'s exor. On motion by applt. that the proceedings in the appeal be continued between him & the exor. & that the latter be added as resp.:—Held: (1) the proceedings in the appeal were begun in the lifetime of resp., inasmuch as the notice in writing given by applt. to the comrs. requiring them to state & sign a case was the commencement of the proceedings; (2) the proceedings did not abate on the death of resp., & the ct. was entitled, in the absence of apt procedure being provided by statute on the subject, to mould a convenient form of procedure so that the appeal could be heard, & it would do this by ordering that resp.'s exor. be added as resp.; (3) service of a copy of the case on the exor. was a sufficient compliance with above sect. as to serving the other party to an appeal with a copy of the case.—*SMITH v. 612. ——— Whether business carried on by company or director.]—In 1911 J. S. sold his business as a going concern to a private co., J. S., Ltd. The capital was 2,500 shares of £10 each, of which 2,499 shares were held by S. & one share by H., a former employee, who subsequently in May, 1917, sold that one share to S.'s daughter. S. was the sole governing director, & the whole direction, control, & management of the business & affairs of the co. were in his hands. By its memorandum, the co. had power to lend money to such persons & on such terms as it should think fit. After the outbreak of war the co. made large profits. No dividends were ever declared, but up to 1916 the accumulated profits were put into the business. During 1916 the co. made loans to S. amounting to £3,907 3s. 3d., & during 1917, up to the taxable year ended Apr. 5, 1917, to the amount of £2,624 7s. 6d. These loans were made without either interest or security, & there was no evidence of them beyond entries in the co.'s ledger. S. purchased war stock in his own name with the proceeds of the loans. In Sept. 1917, a resolution was passed to wind up the co. Between Apr. 6, 1917, & the winding up further loans were made to S. In the winding up these loans were treated by the liquidator as part of the co.'s assets, S. not being asked to repay them, but accounting for them in receiving his share of the assets on distribution. S. was assessed to super-tax on the loans made & appealed to the comrs. The comrs. found that the co. was a properly constituted legal entity, with power to make loans to such persons & upon such terms as it should think fit; that it did make such loans to S.; & that such loans did not form part of S.'s income for the purposes of super tax, & they accordingly discharged the assessment. On appeal by the Crown, on a case stated, an order was made that the case should be remitted to the comrs. to determine whether the co. in point of truth & fact carried on the business, or whether S. carried it on; & whether, if the co. carried on the business, it did so as agent for S., or whether it carried it on on its own behalf for the benefit of the corporators. On appeal:—Held: the findings of the comrs. being on questions of fact were conclusive & involved the negating of both the questions directed to be put to them, & therefore that it would be wrong to send the case back to them to answer the questions; the order remitting the case to the comrs. must be discharged & their decision affirmed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. Additional assessments to income tax, Schedule A., were accordingly made in respect of the tax undercharged, & the inspector of taxes refused to certify the claim under rule 8 on the ground that relief under that rule applied only to assessments which were reduced for purposes of collection under rule 7 of No. V. When declaratory order will be made—Where right of appeal available—Application in Chancery Division.]—Pltf. was served with a notice under Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), Part III., requiring him to make a return for the purposes of excess profits duty in respect of his trade or business. As an advising engineer he was engaged in a profession dependent mainly upon his personal qualifications but, since July, 1915, in addition to his private practice, he had negotiated govt. contracts on behalf of a co. making munitions of war & had advised the co. generally as an engineer. For this he received a fixed retaining fee per week & also a fixed payment for each shell & fuse of a certain description supplied by the co. Pltf. claimed to be within the exception (c) to sect. 39 of the Act, exempting him from excess profits duty, denied his liability to furnish a return or supply information to the Comrs., & commenced this action for a declaratory judgment to that effect.

The ct. in the exercise of its discretion, & without expressing any opinion upon the question whether pltf. was carrying on a trade or business which was subject to the provisions of Part III. of the Act, refused to make any declaratory order, being of opinion (1) that the elements of invalidity & public interest present in Dyson v. A.-G., [1912] 1 Ch. 158 & Burghes v. A.-G., [1912] 1 Ch. 173 were absent from this case, in which the real question was whether pltf.'s business was within sect. 39 or not, & (2), that it was not desirable that cases of this character, in which the right of appeal prescribed by the Act was available to pltf. if dissatisfied with his assessment, should be withdrawn from the ct. constituted for the purpose of dealing with revenue cases.—*SMEETON v. In the computation of applt.'s total income for the year ended Apr. 5, 1920, upon which the assessment to super tax made upon him for the year ended Apr. 5, 1921, had been based, both the dividends in question had been included:—Held: the dividends were not receivable until they had been declared by the co., & as they had both been declared during the year ended Apr. 5, 1920, they had properly been included in the computation of applt.'s total income for that year, upon which he had been assessed residuary estate to pay his wife during widowhood the sum requisite to make up her marriage settlement income to "the clear annual sum of £4,000 a year free from income tax":—Held: the wife was entitled to the £4,000 a year free from super tax as well as ordinary income tax.

Super tax was an additional income tax.—Re CROSSE, OLDHAM v. CROSSE, [1920] 1 Ch. 240; 89 L. J. Ch. 145; 122 L. T. 462; 64 Sol. Jo. 260.

o. —.]—Applt. had been assessed to super tax for the years ending Apr. 5, 1919, Apr. 5, 1920, & Apr. 5, 1921, in the sums of £10,810, £11,387 & £12,119 respectively, on the basis of his own returns of income for super tax purposes, which included in each case a dividend of £10,000, paid under deduction of income tax, on his shares in a co. Subsequently to the payment of the duty under the original super tax assessments, it was ascertained that dividends on the shares had been declared & paid as follows:—(a) On Apr. 27, 1917, for the year to Dec. 31, 1916, £10,000; (b) On Mar. 28, 1918, for the year to Dec. 31, 1917, £10,000; (c) On Apr. 11, 1919, for the year to Dec. 31, 1918, £10,000; & (d) on Apr. 2, 1920, for the year to Dec. 31, 1919, £10,000; £20,000 thus being receivable in each of the years ending Apr. 5, 1918, & Apr. 5, 1920, & no income from this source in the year ending Apr. 5, 1919. The assessment to super tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1920, was accordingly discharged & additional assessments in the sum of £10,000 each raised for the years ending Apr. 5, 1919, & Apr. 5, 1921:—Held: (1) an assessment to income tax covered only such income as was comprehended in the notice of the assessment; (2) there was no assessment to income tax upon applt. quoad the dividends, & sub-sect. 2 of sect. 5 of 1918 Act thus being inapplicable, the additional super tax assessments had been rightly made in accordance with the provisions of sub-sect. 3 (c) of that sect.—*DUNCAN v. 648. — Served abroad.]—Resps. in the first two cases were directors of a British co. & were in receipt of income subject to British income tax by deduction. They were both of foreign nationality, resident in Paris, & had no residence in the United Kingdom, their visits to this country being of very short duration. The special Comrs. served upon each resp. by registered post at his Paris address a notice to make a return of his income for super tax purposes for the year 1917–18. As no returns were received, the Special Comrs. made an assessment to super tax upon each resp. for that year in a sum estimated according to the best of their judgment under the provisions of Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72 (5). Notices of the assessments were sent to resps. by registered post at their Paris addresses. The facts in the third case were similar to the foregoing, except that B., on whom the assessments in dispute, those for 1914–15 & 1915–16, were made before his death, was a British subject resident in Italy. It was contended in each case on appeal before the Special Comrs. that the Special Comrs. had no jurisdiction under Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72, to serve outside the United Kingdom either a notice requiring a return of income or a notice of assessment; that the giving of notice of appeal against the assessment did not constitute acquiescence in the Special Comrs.' jurisdiction; that valid service of a notice to make a return had not been effected, that there was consequently no failure to make a return within Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72 (5), & that the power to make an estimated assessment did not therefore arise, & that the assessment was invalid & should be discharged. The Special Comrs. upheld these contentions & discharged the respective assessments:—Held: the authority conferred on the Special Comrs. by Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 72, & the regulations made thereunder, extends to the service abroad of a notice to make a return of income for the purposes of super tax, & of a notice of a valid assessment to super tax, & the assessments in question were validly made.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. Applt. contended that, inasmuch as, for the year to which the super tax assessment related, his total income, estimated in the same manner, amounted only to £2,358, he was not chargeable to super tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1916:—Held: applt. was chargeable to super tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1916, by reference to his total income for the preceding year, as estimated in the manner prescribed.—*ANDREWES v. One of the conditions attached to the proposed purchase was that, prior to the transfer of the shares, resp., by virtue of his controlling interest in the co., should induce the co. to declare out of the balance of its undivided profits a bonus or special dividend of 10s. per share on its ordinary shares, the proceeds of which should be held by resp. as part of the agreed purchase price. The co. duly declared such bonus or special dividend free of income tax, & free also of super tax up to a sum not exceeding £6,000 should a claim upon any shareholder for the latter tax arise by reason of the receipt of the bonus. Resp. received from the co. in Sept. 1916, a payment of £39,960 in respect of the bonus or special dividend on his shares. The terms of the agreement for sale were first included in a written document in Oct. 1916, in which the purchase price was stated to be £2 10s. per share, but in which resp. was stated also to be entitled to, & to have previously received, the bonus or special dividend of 10s. per share, which had been declared subsequently to July 1916. Upon an appeal by resp. against the assessment to super tax made upon him for the year ended Apr. 5, 1918, the special comrs. held that the sum of £39,960 & the income tax applicable thereto constituted part of the purchase price of the shares & did not form part of resp.'s total income upon which he was liable to super tax for the year 1917-18:—Held: the evidence before the special comrs. did not justify the conclusion of fact that an enforceable agreement for sale had existed between the parties prior to the written agreement of Oct. 12, 1916, & the bonus or special dividend therefore formed part of resp.'s income & had not been received by him on behalf of the purchaser.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SANDERSON (1921), 8 Tax Cas. 38, C. A.; subsequent proceedings, sub nom. SANDERSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1924), 9 Tax Cas. 80.

658. — — — Reimbursement of super tax as part of purchase price.]—Applt. had in July, 1916, entered into negotiations with a financial corp'n. for the sale of the whole of his shareholding in a co. of which he was managing director & in which he had the controlling interest. One of the conditions attached to the proposed purchase was that, prior to the transfer of the shares, applt. should induce the co. to declare out of the balance of its undivided profits a bonus or special dividend of 10s. per share on its ordinary shares, the proceeds of which should be held by applt. as part of the agreed purchase price. The co. duly declared such bonus or special dividend free of income tax, & further agreed to pay super tax up to £6,000 as a maximum should a claim upon any shareholder for the latter tax arise by reason of the receipt of the dividend. Applt. received from the co. in Sept. 1916, a payment of £39,960 in respect of the special dividend on his shares.

The terms of the sale—including the arrangement for the payment of super tax up to £6,000—were first embodied in a written agreement in Oct. 1916. The question of applt.'s liability to super tax in respect of the special dividend was raised in the case of Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Sanderson, No. 657, ante, which was decided in favour of the Crown by the K. B. Div. on July 26, 1920—a decision confirmed by the Ct. of Appeal on May 31, 1921. On Dec. 6, 1920, i.e. after the shares had been transferred by applt., the said sum of £6,000 in respect of super tax was duly paid to applt. by the purchasing corp'n. out of the profits of the co.:—Held: applt. received the said sum of £6,000 under the agreement of Oct. 1916, as part of the purchase price of the shares sold by him, & not in his capacity as a shareholder, & that the said sum accordingly did not form part of his income for super-tax purposes.—SANDERSON v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1924), 9 Tax Cas. 80.

659. — — — Applied to purchase of shares already issued—Distinguished from capitalisation of profits.]—To enable a particular director to withdraw from the management of a co. it was arranged that the greater part of his shareholding should be available for purchase by the remaining shareholders, of whom applt. was one, in proportion to their existing holdings. In order to provide them with funds for this purpose the directors on July 5, 1917, recommended that £45,000 should be distributed out of the profits of the co. by way of special dividend, & the retiring director further agreed to apply the special dividend on his own shares & the cash received for their sale in taking up £45,000 debentures in the co.

On July 16, 1917, at an extraordinary general

PART XI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—B.

p. Income of trust estate—Part retained by trustees—For capital purposes under trust instrument.]—Under his father's will resp. was entitled, in the events which happened, during the subsistence of the trust of the residuary estate, to occupy a mansion-house & grounds so long as the trustees should find it expedient to retain it in their hands unlet, the trustees being directed to hold it in trust "for the life rent use" of resp. so long as his mother should remain alive, subject to his not contravening a certain condition. Resp. had no power to let the property. The residuary estate was to be held in trust until the mtges. on the residuary estate had been reduced to £100,000, the ultimate meeting of the co. a resolution was accordingly passed declaring, out of accumulated profits, special dividends on ordinary & preference shares amounting to £60,000 in all, or £45,000 after deduction of income tax. Prior to the passing of the resolution applt. signed a letter authorising the directors to use his portion of the special dividend in payment of the consideration money for such of the retiring director's shares as were purchased by him, & similar letters were signed by the other shareholders. With three exceptions the existing shareholders, including applt., duly applied their portion of the dividend to the purchase of shares from the retiring director, who in turn duly took up & paid for £45,000 debentures in the co.:—Held: the transaction was in no sense a capitalisation of profits, the special dividend was receivable by the shareholders as income, & the arrangement, whether binding or not, to apply it in the purchase of other shares in the co., could not affect applt.'s obligation under Finance 1909–1910 Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 66 (2), to include his portion of that dividend in his total income for the purposes of super tax for the year ending Apr. 5, 1919.—ROE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1924), 131 L. T. 255; 8 Tax Cas. 613.

660. — Distribution of reserve fund — Distributable in cash or shares at option of directors.]—Resp. was one of several directors of a limited co. who between them held all the ordinary shares therein. In June of each year from 1911 to 1915 inclusive, the co. in general meeting set aside out of profits certain sums as a reserve fund to be at the complete disposal of the directors for the time being, & in particular as a provision for equalising dividends. On the retirement or death of any director a proportionate share of this "Dividend Equalisation Fund" was payable to him or his legal representatives.

On Mar. 27, 1919, the co. passed a resolution authorising the directors to distribute the fund among the ordinary shareholders "as a funded debt payable at the option of the directors in cash or in fully paid preference shares at par," & four days later the directors resolved to pay the fund in cash & to credit the amount to which each shareholder, director, was entitled to his loan account with the co., but no special arrangement was made as to interest on the amounts so credited or for their redemption by the co. The directors' loan accounts were used for crediting their fees, dividends & interest, & they were in the habit of withdrawing varying amounts therefrom from time to time. Interest was allowed on these accounts at 5 per cent. up to Apr. 1, 1917, & thereafter at 6 per cent.:—Held: the Dividend Equalisation Fund was receivable by the directors as income on the passing of the resolutions in Mar. 1919, & resp.'s share of the fund was therefore properly included in computing his total income for super tax purposes for the year 1919–20.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. DONCASTER (1924), 93 L. J. K. B. 338; 131 L. T. 317; 40 T. L. R. 433; 68 Sol. Jo. 596; 8 Tax Cas. 623.

661. — Distributable in cash or shares at option of shareholder.]—Resp. was a shareholder in a limited co., which resolved to divide part of its reserve fund by way of bonus dividend, shareholders being entitled, instead of taking payment wholly in cash, to allow part of the amount coming to them to be applied in satisfying the sum payable in respect of a portion of certain new shares proposed to be issued to shareholders. Resp., in exercise of this option, accepted a number of shares & received cash in respect of the rest of the bonus dividend. Resp. was assessed to super tax in respect of the shares & the rest of the bonus dividend:—Held: as resp. had an option whether he would take the bonus dividend in cash or in shares, & as it was resp., & not the co., that had applied a portion of the bonus to payment for shares, the distribution of both cash & shares was a distribution not of capital, but of income, & the assessment was right.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. The shareholders had no option to receive cash in lieu of shares in satisfaction of the bonus:—Held: the shares credited to resp. in respect of the bonus, being distributed by the co. as capital, were not income in the hands of resp., which he was required to include in his return of total income from all sources for the purposes of super tax assessment.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. The debentures, which could be enforced by the shareholders in certain events only, were issued accordingly:—Held: the debenture stock was not income to the recipients & was not liable to assessment to super tax, inasmuch as what was received by the shareholder was not something as to which he could exercise his own choice & volition.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. On that date the rights in the invention, together with other benefits, were assigned to the co. in consideration of a sum of money & certain other payments described as "royalties" in the assignment. J. was assessed to super tax upon the sum received by him in respect of the so-called royalties for the year ended Apr. 5, 1916, & appealed on the ground (inter alia) that the sums received by him were part of the purchase-money & constituted capital & not income:—Held: (1) the sums paid were annual payments within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, & J. was properly assessed.

(2) It has been urged that the annual payments now in question, being 10 per cent. upon the sales of machines for ten years, is part of the consideration which was paid for the transfer from applt. of his property. So it is; but there is no law of nature or any invariable principle that because it can be said that a certain payment is consideration for the transfer of property it must be looked upon as price in the character of principal. In each case regard must be had to what the sum is. A man may sell his property for a sum which is to be paid in instalments, & when that is the case the payments to him are not income. Or a man may sell his property for an annuity. In that case the Income Tax Act applies (ROWLATT, J.).

(3) He took something which rose or fell with the chances of the business. When a man does that he takes an income; it is in the nature of income, & on that ground I decide this case (ROWLATT, J.).—JONES v. INLAND REVENUE

668. Income of trust estate—Accumulated for benefit of infant.]—Testator by his will gave certain real estate to trustees upon trust for the eldest of his sons who should be living at the time of his death absolutely upon his attaining the age of twenty-one years, & failing such son he directed the same to fall into & be held upon the same trusts as were declared concerning his residuary estate. He gave the residue of his property, both real & personal, to his trustees, subject to certain payments to his wife, upon trust for all his children in equal shares which were to be an interest absolutely vested on his death. He empowered the trustees to apply the whole or such part as they thought fit of the income of the property or share to which any infant should be entitled or contingently entitled towards his or her maintenance, education or benefit, & he directed the trustees to accumulate the unapplied surplus income, such accumulation to be added as capital to the property or share whence the same should have arisen. Testator at his death left four children, all of whom were infants. The trustees made certain payments to testator's widow in accordance with the terms of the will & accumulated the surplus income. An assessment to super tax was made upon one of the trustees in respect of the accumulated income arising from the estate specifically bequeathed in trust for the eldest son & from the one-fourth share of the residuary estate to which the eldest son was entitled:—Held: inasmuch as there was a trust in testator's will to accumulate the income subject to a power to the trustees to apply such sums as they thought proper for the maintenance of testator's children, the portion of the income which was accumulated was not the income of the infant eldest son, such accumulations coming to him not as income but as capital, & were therefore not liable to assessment to super tax.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. BLACKWELL, [1924] 2 K. B. 351; 93 L. J. K. B. 1001; 40 T. L. R. 801; on appeal, [1926] 1 K. B. 389; 134 L. T. 372, C. A.

669. Share of residuary estate—Income accruing to estate—After residuary account delivered.]—An individual was entitled absolutely under the will of his mother who died in 1912 to one half of her residuary estate, which included her interest in certain surplus rents & profits undisposed of by his grandmother's will until certain events should happen. The exors. of his mother's will delivered a residuary account of her estate on Dec. 19, 1914, including the sums received by them up to that date in respect of the said surplus income from the grandmother's estate, but the value of his mother's interest in that estate was not ascertained for estate duty purposes until Mar. 11, 1919, & under Legacy Duty Act, 1796 (c. 135), s. 11, legacy duty remained to be paid from time to time under his mother's will on the several sums of surplus income as & when received by her exors. Assessments to super tax were for £100,000 to be held on the same trusts:—Held: neither the annual value, as assessed to Income Tax under Schedules A. & B., of the mansion-house & grounds nor the income under the marriage contract from the shares so far as exceeding 12½ per cent.

q. Surplus of accumulated profits—Not distributed among shareholders—Issue of new shares.]—Where the surplus accumulation of profits of a co. instead of being distributed among its shareholders, was capitalised under a special resolution of the co., & new shares were issued to the shareholders representing their share in the accumulated surplus:—Held: the new shares were not taxable as income, & that the shareholders were not liable to super-tax on the value of the new shares issued to them.—INCOME TAX COMR. ETC. (MADRAS) v. BINNY & Co. (MADRAS) LTD. (1924), 1 L. L. R. 47 Mad. 837.—IND.

—In H. Co. by resolution decided to increase its capital by £50,000, & towards that end to capitalise the sum made on the son for the years 1914-15 to 1917-18 inclusive in respect of the share of such surplus income receivable by him for the respective preceding years. On appeal to the Special Comrs., he contended (1) that his share of the said surplus income was receivable by him as capital & not as income; (2) that the residue of his mother's estate could not be ascertained until her interest in the grandmother's estate had determined & that until then the income of the estate was the income of the exors. & not of the residuary legatees; (3) that each payment of the said surplus was a separate legacy chargeable with legacy duty which had in fact been paid thereon & as such was capital & not income; & (4) alternatively that the legacy duty charged & paid on such payments was a proper deduction for super tax purposes. The Special Comrs. decided that the residue of the mother's estate was ascertained not later than the date of the delivery of the residuary account on Dec. 19, 1914, & that as from that date the son's share of the said surplus income was receivable by him as income & should be included in the computation of his income for super tax purposes, subject to deduction of the legacy duty charged thereon:—Held: as the mother's estate was still in course of administration up to 1919 at least, the surplus income received up to that date did not belong specifically to the residuary legatees, & the son was accordingly not assessable to super tax for the years in question in respect of any part of such surplus income.—*HERBERT v. 672. Income received by vendor of securities—Securities sold cum interest—Income handed over to purchaser.]—The holder of certain registered notes of a limited co., the interest on which was payable half-yearly on May 31 & Nov. 30, under deduction of income tax, sold them with the accrued interest under a contract of sale dated Nov. 29, 1922. The transfer was not executed until Dec. 14, 1922, & the co.'s books being closed from Nov. 16 to Nov. 30, for the purpose of the paying the interest then due, the half-year's interest on the notes in question was paid, less income tax, to the vendor on or about Dec. 1, & such net amount was handed over by him to the purchaser under the rules of the Stock Exchange. An assessment to super tax was made upon the vendor for the year 1923-24 in respect of the gross amount of the half-year's interest paid on Nov. 30, 1922, but he contended that such interest did not form part of his income for super tax purposes, & the Special Comrs., on appeal, discharged the assessment:—Held: for super tax purposes the interest in question was not income of the vendor but of the purchaser.—*WIGMORE v. 673. Income received by owner of shares—Held on voluntary trust—Intention to transfer shares at future date.]—Resp., who was the principal shareholder & held the controlling interest in a co., set aside a certain number of his shares for transfer to certain employees of the co. on the terms that, until the actual transfer, he was to receive the dividends, & that when the total of the dividends on the shares set aside for an employee amounted to the par value of a share, the share so paid for should be transferred to the employee. Resp. was assessed to super tax on the dividends received by him on the shares so set aside:—Held: since the dividends as they accrued were dividends of resp., although he might be under obligations with regard to them in the future, they formed part of his income for the purpose of assessment to super tax.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. PARSONS (1925), 41 T. L. R. 572; 69 Sol. Jo. 663.

674. Conversion of firm into company—Apportionment of profits & dividends for assessment.]—Resp. was a partner in a firm on which early in the assessment year 1919-20 an assessment to income tax was made for that year under Schedule D. on the average of the three previous years' trading. On Sept. 3, 1919, the firm sold their undertaking as from Jan. 1, 1919, with all its profits to a limited co., & resp. became the holder of 21,000 shares in the co. For the year ending Dec. 31, 1919, the co. declared a dividend. In computing the assessment of resp. to super tax for the year 1920-21 resp.'s share of the firm's income tax assessment for the year 1919-20, apportioned up to Sept. 2, 1919, was included, & there was also included such portion of resp.'s dividend above mentioned as would be left by excluding the amount that accrued on a de die in diem basis from Apr. 6 to Sept. 2, 1919. On an appeal by resp. against the super tax assessment the Special Comrs. held that such proportion of the dividend as was paid out of the profits for the period Jan. 1, 1919, to Sept. 2, 1919, must be excluded, & they reduced the assessment accordingly:—Held: as the dividend paid was in respect of the whole year 1919 & not merely in respect of the period from Sept. 3 to Dec. 31, 1919, the original super tax assessment amounted to double taxation, & the decision of the Special Commissioners must be affirmed.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 675. Income of partner.]—Applt. was a partner in a firm & consequent upon the retirement of another partner on Sept. 30, 1908, became entitled to a further percentage of the profits of the firm. Applt. himself retired from the firm on Sept. 30, 1909. In making the super tax assessment for the year ended Apr. 5, 1910, applt.'s income in respect of the partnership profits was computed by first taking the Schedule D. assessment on the firm for the year ended Apr. 5, 1909, which assessment was based on the average profits of the

of £16,665, being undivided profits, & to distribute the relative shares as a bonus among the shareholders in proportion to their holdings. This resolution was carried into effect & respondents, as shareholders, received a large number of such bonus shares:—Held: that the shares so distributed were "receipts or accruals of a capital nature" in terms of sect. 6, Act 41, 1917, & were not therefore assessable for super tax under the provisions of that Act.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [1923] App. D. 347.—S. AF.

Applt. claimed that, in computing for super tax purposes his income derived from the partnership profits, his share should be computed on the basis of the actual amount received by him either during the year of the super tax assessment or during the previous year:—Held: the principles adopted in making the assessment were correct.—*GAUNT v. She was assessed to super tax for the year 1913–1914, & the trustees under the will paid the tax charged under the assessment out of the trust moneys held by them, from which income tax had been deducted at the source.

An additional assessment to super tax for the year 1914–1915 in respect of the super tax thus paid by the trustees on applt.'s behalf of the income tax applicable thereto was made upon applt.:—Held: the additional assessment had been correctly made, & the amount of the super tax paid for applt. plus the income tax applicable to that amount formed part of her total income for the purpose of super tax.—*MEEKING v. Lump sum—Paid as composition for share of annual profits—Distribution over years covered by composition.]—In consideration of an advance of £7,000 made by an individual to a co. in 1905, he received (1) from the co., £7,000 5 per cent. debentures repayable by the co. after Dec. 1914, by half-yearly instalments of £500, & (2) from a director of the co., 5,600 £1 ordinary shares, being one-fifth of the total share capital of the co., of which he was to retransfer 400 shares on receiving each payment of £500; subject to certain adjustments he was also to receive one-fifth of the co.'s profits each year up to Dec. 1914, & thereafter a share of the profits corresponding, in effect, to the proportion of the £7,000 debentures remaining unrepaid from time to time. No payment was made by the co. to him in respect of the profits for the years 1915, 1916, & 1917 until Jan. 1920, when, following a resolution in general meeting in June, 1919, a sum of £6,000 was paid to him in settlement of the liability for those three years. He received no further payment in respect of profits until May, 1921, when, following resolutions of the directors & the shareholders in general meeting in Dec. 1920, he was paid £10,000 in full settlement of the liability under the agreement up to Dec. 31, 1921, the prospective date of its termination.

The sums of £6,000 & £10,000 were assessed to super tax for the years 1920–21 & 1921–22 respectively as forming part of his total income for the years 1919–20 & 1920–21 respectively, & on appeal, the special comrs. confirmed the assessments:—Held: under the original agreement, he was entitled to have his share of the profits paid to him each year, & for the purpose of computing his income for super tax purposes, the said sums of £6,000 & £10,000 must be spread over the years in respect of the profits of which they were paid, subject, however, to the entire exclusion from liability to super tax of such part of the sum of £10,000 as represented a composition of his right to receive a share of the profits of the year

Policy on life of & loan to wife.

For benefit of husband.—A wife, in order to render her husband financial assistance, obtained a loan from an insurance co., applied the greater part of it in the purchase of shares from him, & gave the shares & a policy on her own life effected with the insurance co. to the co. as security for the loan. The dividends on the shares were to be received by the co., & applied in paying (a) interest on the loan, (b) premiums on the policy, & (c) an annual sum of £500 in reduction of the principal of the loan, any balance remaining being payable by the co. to the wife. As collateral security she also charged her life interest under her marriage settlement with the amount (if any) by which the dividends fell short of the sum required to cover the interest & premiums, &, as her interest under the settlement was subject to a restraint on anticipation, the sanction of the ct. was obtained to the whole scheme. In fact the dividends considerably exceeded the payments (a), (b) & (c), & the balances were duly paid to the wife. The husband contended that only the said balances of dividends paid to his wife should be included in the computation of his liability to super tax, while the Revenue contended that the full amount of the dividends should be included, subject only to a deduction of the interest paid on the loan:—Held: the full amount of the dividends on the said shares less only the loan interest, was income of the wife, & must be included in the computation of the liability to super tax.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. PATERSON (1924), 9 Tax Cas. 163, C. A.

685. Deductions allowed in assessing income tax.—Applt. was assessed to super tax for the year ended Apr. 5, 1922, in the sum of £6,001 by reference to his total income for the previous year as assessed to income tax. In the assessment to income tax under Schedule E. for the previous year in respect of a pension of £900 included in the total income, the allowances to which he had proved himself to be entitled under 1920 Act, ss. 16-18, had been duly granted to him. Applt. appealed against the super tax assessment for the year 1921-22 & contended that, inasmuch as a personal allowance of £225 had been granted to him in computing his income tax liability for the year 1920-21, a similar allowance should be made in computing to super tax for the year 1921-22; that super tax, being an additional income tax, was not chargeable on an income greater than that liable to income tax; that income tax ought to be deducted in calculating the amount of income liable to super tax; & that, in view of Schedule E., r. 1, the income tax under Schedule E., payable by him for the previous year in respect of the pension, should be deducted in arriving at the amount of pension income liable to super tax:—Held: (1) the liability to super tax is required, by 1918 Act, s. 5, as amended by the Third Schedule to 1920 Act, to be based on

t. Life insurance premiums—Mortgage interest.—B. had raised moneys on mtge. of his life estate in settled property, & had further secured the debts by policies of insurance on his life. M. was a party to the mtges., & covenanted to pay the interest on the loans & the premiums on the policies in case of non-payment, by B. B. never made any payment of interest or premiums, & M. had been obliged to pay the same:—Held: the gross taxable income of M. for the purposes of super tax was liable to be diminished by the annual sums which he was under a legal obligation to pay, whether in respect of premiums on the policies of insurance or the interest on mtges.—MASSEY (LORD) v. a. Legacy duty on residuary income—Though trustees primarily liable.—Applt. was entitled under a will to a share of the net annual income of testator's residuary estate. Legacy duty was chargeable on the sums so payable from year to year, & was duly paid to the Crown by the trustees, who deducted it from their remittances to applt.:—Held: although the trustees were primarily accountable for the legacy duty, it was, in effect, a personal obligation of applt., & that the income receivable under the bequest had been rightly included in the computation of his total income for the purposes of super tax in the full amount of his share of the net residuary income, the income tax applicable without deduction of the legacy duty paid by the trustees on his behalf.—COLVILLE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1923), 8 Tax Cas. 442.—SCOT.

b. Losses in occupation of land for husbandry.—Held: a taxpayer in making a return of his income of the previous year for the purposes of the super tax is entitled to claim as deductions losses sustained in husbandry although these losses had not been claimed as deductions from his income tax & although his claim was not made within 6 months after the year of assessment.—HILL v. INLAND REVENUE, [1912] S. C. 1246.—SCOT.

c. Dividend — "Tax free."—Shares of the nominal value of £1,000 were purchased Nov. 1919, at the price of £1,050, the £50 being expressly stated in the contract as covering dividend accrued to the date of purchase. May 1920 a tax-free dividend of £100 for the year to Feb. 28, 1920, equivalent to £142 with the addition of income tax, was declared & paid. In his return of total income for super-tax purposes, the purchaser sought to deduct a portion of the dividend received, in respect that it represented the capital expended by him in purchasing the accrued dividend:—Held: the whole amount of the dividend was income of the purchaser notwithstanding the terms of the contract, & fell to be included by him in his return of total income.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. FORREST, [1924] S. C. 450.—SCOT.

d. Annual sums paid out of property or profits.—By antenuptial marriage contract the heir-apparent to an entailed estate, with the consent of the heir in possession, appointed an annuity to his wife & made certain provisions for his younger children payable at his death out of the entailed estate. The heir-apparent died in January 1917, predeceasing the heir in possession, upon whose death, in June of the same year, it was found that these provisions made by the heir-apparent exceeded the amounts authorised by the Aberdeen Act. By interlocutor pronounced Nov. 1918 in a petition by the heir then in possession, the Court restricted these charges to the competent amounts, & in the following month the heir made a comulio payment equal to two years' annuity & two years' interest on the provisions thus restricted:—Held: the payment in question included accumulated annual charges which had in fact become payable from the date of the heir-apparent's death, Jan. 1917, &, accordingly, that it did not fall to be deducted in its entirety from income of the year ending Apr. 5, 1919, but only to the extent of the charges which did not become payable until that year.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. HADDINGTON (EARL), [1924] S. C. 456.—SCOT.

e. Yearly interest on advances.—A landed proprietor in 1919 obtained advances from his law-agents in connexion with the purchase & sale of certain heritable estates. On these advances, which varied in amount from time to time, interest was charged by the law agents at the rates prevailing in Scottish banks on overdraft accounts, the rate of interest fluctuating with the bank rate. The proprietor's income was collected by

694. ———.]—A direction for an annuity "to be paid without any deduction by equal quarterly payments free from income tax" is a direction to pay free from super tax.

By Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 66, super tax is called "an additional duty of income tax," & it must be assumed that testator knew that income tax embraced super tax. Therefore the actual bequest standing alone is a bequest of an annuity of £4,000 free of super tax (LAURENCE, J.).

By directing payment of the annuity without any deduction free of income tax, testator drew a distinction between deductions & income tax &, as SARGANT, J., said in Re Doxat, Doxat v. Doxat, No. 644, ante, where the words were "free of income tax & of all other deductions," it would be curious if the words "all other deductions" should be held to diminish the force of the previous words, so in the present case it would be curious if the words, "without any deduction" should be given the effect of diminishing the force of the subsequent words "free of income tax." The annuitant is therefore entitled to be paid her annuity free of super tax, & following the direction given in Re Doxat, Doxat v. Doxat, No. 644, ante, the income of the residuary estate must bear such proportion of the total super tax payable by testator's widow as the annuity with the income tax thereon added thereto bore to the total amount of her income assessed for the purposes of super tax (LAURENCE, J.).—*Re BOWEN, PADDOCK v. 697. Income of married woman—When living with her husband—Income received before marriage.]—Where a person who separates from her husband, lives apart from him for some years, & then, after divorce proceedings, marries again, is, while living with her second husband, assessed to super tax for a year during the period in which she was living apart from her husband, the period to be regarded is the year for which the assessment is made, & not that in which the assessment is made, & therefore such person is chargeable in her own name to super tax for such year as a married woman living separate from her then husband within Income Tax Act, 1842 (c. 35), s. 45.—*BROOKE v. 698. ——— Marriage in year preceding year of assessment.]—Under the provisions of 1918 Act, relating to super tax, by one of which for the purposes of that tax the total income of any individual for the year of assessment shall be taken to be the total income of that individual for the previous year:—Held: for the purposes aforesaid the total income of a woman married in the previous year & living with her husband during the remainder of that year & the year of assessment includes her income during the part the law-agents, who from time to time reduced the advances out of this income & out of the proceeds of the sales of heritages. Interest was calculated annually in July, & debited to the proprietor's account. In computing the amount of interest payable by their clients, the agents made the appropriate deductions for income tax. This interest was treated by them as having suffered income tax, & was not again charged to income tax in their hands. The arrangement, which was not reduced to writing, subsisted continuously until 1923:—Held: the interest annually charged on these advances was "yearly interest" within Income Tax Act, 1918, s. 27 (1) (b), & was admissible as a deduction in computing the proprietor's income for the purpose of his assessment to super tax.—*INLAND REVENUE v. 700. — On death of husband—In year of assessment—After application for separate assessment.]—A husband & wife were separately assessed to super tax in accordance with the provisions of Finance Act, 1914 (c. 10), s. 9, at the rate applicable for that year based on their combined income. The husband died during the year of assessment. The wife claimed that under Finance Act, 1912 (c. 8), s. 6, she was only liable to pay super tax at the rate applicable to the combined income of herself & her husband for the proportion of the year that had elapsed before the death of the husband :—Held : Finance Act, 1912 (c. 8), s. 6, only applied to the super tax which the deceased person was liable to pay. The deceased person & his wife were under Finance Act, 1914 (c. 10), s. 9, to be treated for the purposes of super tax as if they were not married. The wife had therefore taken upon herself liability for super tax at the rate which at the date of the assessment was the correct rate, & that assessment remained in force.—WYNDHAM (LADY) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1920] 3 K. 702. — "Living with her husband"—Inhabiting same house under separation deed.]—Applt. & his wife, between whom differences had arisen, executed an indenture in 1912, which provided that applt. would during their joint lives, & so long as they continued to reside at a certain house, & so long as she observed the covenants therein, pay to her the weekly sum of £30, amounting to £1,560 a year, for her sole & separate use ; that applt. should be at liberty to reside at & have the joint use of the house free of expense ;

that his wife would, so long as he should pay the weekly sum, pay the rates, taxes & assessments, repairs, & household expenses, wages, & tradesmen's bills in respect of the premises, & would indemnify him against these payments & her maintenance, & would not pledge his credit ; that she would not take any steps to compel him to cohabit with her or interfere with him in any manner ; & that the indenture might be determined by either party by six months' notice. Applt. did not since the date of the indenture live maritally with his wife, & in Feb. 1913, he ceased to reside at the house, & since that time they had lived continuously apart & had no direct communication. In 1921 applt. gave notice terminating the indenture. From 1912 to 1921 applt. duly paid the weekly sum to his wife. In the assessment of applt. to super tax for two of the years during which the deed was in operation the respective annual sums of £1,560 each were sought to be included as part of his income :—Held : in the circumstances, applt.'s wife was not during these years "a married woman living with her husband" within Schedule D., Rules applicable to all Schedules, r. 16 (1), so that her income could not be assessed in his name instead of her own ; the sums formed part of the income of applt.'s wife & not of the applt. ; & therefore, these sums should not be included as part of applt.'s income for purposes of super tax.—EADIE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1924] 2 K. For his services until the date of completion pltf. was to be paid a fixed sum monthly. Pltf. was assessed for super tax on the profits of the business from Apr. 6, 1919, to Aug. 22, 1919. He paid the amount demanded & claimed to recover an indemnity from defts. :—Held : pltf., as agent of defts., was entitled to be indemnified by them in respect of the amount of super tax paid by him, although defts. as a limited co. would not be liable to pay super tax.—ADAMS v. MORGAN & Co., [1924] 1 K. 3. Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (c. 49)—Power to carry on insurance business.]—Pltf. was a member of an industrial society, & had received from them a share book, a membership card, a purchase book, in all of which her name & address were given, & a copy of the rules of the society. By the rules as amended it was provided that the objects of the society should include power to carry on the business of insurance as provided in r. 14a. By r. 14a the committee of management were authorised to appropriate money (inter alia) “for providing a sum to be paid on the death of a member or the wife or husband of a member, such sum to be proportional to one year’s average purchases of the member from the society during the three years immediately preceding death.” The society advertised “free life assurance” as an inducement to persons to become members.

Pltf. alleged that the society had paid large sums of money in respect of this life assurance, & that they were carrying on the business of life assurance within above Act, without having paid the deposit of £20,000 required by sect. 2 (1) of that Act, & brought an action to restrain them from doing so:—Held: the society had done nothing ultra vires; there had been no carrying on of life assurance business within above Act; policies must be in writing & no policy had been issued, no premium had been paid; there was no obligation on the society to appropriate any further sum to the insurance fund, & the arrangement might at any moment be terminated by a general meeting.—*HAMPTON v. See 1893 Act, s. 19.

5. What amounts to banking.]—An industrial society, formed & registered under the Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87), had by its rules, when founded, power to obtain loans on the security of bonds & subject to certain formalities. In 1877 the society passed a rule that money should not be received on deposit. Notwithstanding these rules the society had from time to time received loans on deposit without any bond, & had entered such loans in a book in the form of an ordinary banking book. These deposits were added to & withdrawn from at will, & carried interest. In 1887 the society passed a rule purporting to render these loans valid, & to make them a first charge upon the assets of the society. On a petition brought by the liquidator of the society for directions as to the distribution of the assets, the judge held this rule was binding on the society, & entitled such loan-holders to be paid in priority to trade creditors:—Held: (1) the rule of 1887 was not binding on the society; (2) it was not competent for the society to secure by way of charge upon the assets of the society loans theretofore unlawfully obtained, so as to entitle the lenders to claim upon the assets of the society in its liquidation in priority to other creditors existing at the time of making such rule; (3) the society, by taking loans on deposit in the manner it had done, had in reality carried on the business of a banker as prohibited by Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87), s. 3, & 39 & 40 Vict. c. 45, s. 10 (2) (3).—Re BOTTOMGATE INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (1891), 65 L. 6. Distinguished from building society.]—There is a great distinction between a freehold land society & a benefit building society. A freehold land society buys land with the funds contributed by the members of the society, & then divides it amongst them; but a benefit building society advances to its borrowing members money derived from the subscriptions, & which the borrowing members themselves lay out in the purchase of lands or buildings, & then mortgage them to the society (ROMILLY, M.R.).—GRIMES v. HARRISON (1859), 26 Beav. 435; 28 L. J. Ch. 823; 33 L. T. O. S. 115; 23 J. P. 421; 5 Jur. N. S. 528; 53 E. R. 966.

7. — No power taken in rules—Effect of alteration of title.]—The Kent Benefit Building Society, so enrolled & certified, superadded the title of “Freehold Land Society,” & borrowed money upon mtge., & purchased land therewith through the intervention of trustees. The society became embarrassed & failing to pay interest, the mtgee. sold the estate, which being insufficient, he brought his action, & recovered the balance against the trustees. On the winding up of the co., the trustees claimed the money recovered from them in the action:—Held: (1) the alteration of title did not constitute the society a “Land Society”; (2) they had no power to purchase land except for building, & the claim must be disallowed.—Re KENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 417; 30 L. 9. or prevent a member from recovering a sum of money payable to him under a rule of the society which is not illegal.

(2) Rules made for the bond fide purpose of protecting the funds of such a society from claims, which may be avoided, are not illegal because they are incidentally to some extent in restraint of trade, provided that their provisions go no further than is reasonable & necessary for that purpose.—

PART III.

91. Validity of rules—Rule in restraint of trade—Rule not unreasonable.]—A rule of a limited co-operative creamery registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1893, prohibited members from supplying milk to milk vendors other than the creamery of the society, but did not prohibit sale of milk direct to the public nor bind the members to supply any milk to the creamery. The rule extended only to the milk of cows kept or grazed by the members within certain town lands. No provision was made by the rules for the withdrawal of members from the society otherwise than by a transfer of their shares with the consent of the committee of the society:—Held: the rules were valid & not in illegal restraint of trade.—ATHLAOCA CO-OPERATIVE CREAMERY, LTD. v. LYNCH (1915), 49 I. L. T. 233.—IR.

By the rules of an industrial society established to carry on the business of general dealers, farmers, manufacturers, etc., it was provided that the profits of the society's business should be applied "either to increase the capital, reserve fund, or business of the society, or to any lawful purpose, & the remainder, less any grant that may be made for educational purposes," divided among the members:—Held: a subscription to a strike fund was not a lawful purpose within the rules.—WARBURTON v. In an action to recover upon the contract it appeared that pltf. had been disabled by sickness for a considerable period, but it also appeared that he was a person of no occupation, who had lived upon his private means:—Held: the contract was one of indemnity, & pltf. could recover nothing for disability from work.—BONE v. COLUMBIA LODGE OF member to pay £1 yearly, & to forfeit his share upon making any default of any of the payments provided for; the society not to be broken up while six members existed, or before all the buildings should be completed. The club contracted for the purchase of land, & commenced building without any conveyance being made to them. The land was afterwards, by deed to which the club was party, mortgaged to A. for money advanced to the club. The whole purchase-money paid by the club amounted to more than £30, but not so much as £30 for each subscriber. In 1824 & 1825, E., a member of the club, drew his share, had a house built for him, & entered into possession; & he paid rent till the mtge. was paid off, when the mtgee. conveyed the house to E. & the other members severally. The club had shortly before ended, the shares having been paid up & the houses built. At the time when the club ended, E.'s monthly & annual payments, exclusive of rent, exceeded £30; but such payments made before he came into possession did not amount to £30. The house was not of the annual value of £10:—Held: E. had not any legal or equitable estate until the time of such conveyance.—R. v. CARLTON (INHABITANTS) (1849), 14 Q. B. 110; 3 New Mag. so before or within a reasonable time after he attains full age. In May, 1882, an infant purchased a plot of freehold land from the trustees of a building society of which he was a member & a committee man. In July of that year he came of full age. For four & a half years he paid monthly instalments of the purchase-money, & acted as a committee man:—Held: he had ratified the contract, & was liable under its provisions.—*WHITTINGHAM v. g. Liabilities—Falling due after becoming a member—During suspension—What amounts to notice of.]—The mere fact of a person being a member of a benevolent society incorporated under R. S. O. 1877, c. 167, or of its beneficiary department, raises no implied contract that he will pay the dues & assessment which according to the rules of the society afterwards became due; & in the absence of such a contract on his part, there is no obligation to pay for breach of which an action against him will lie. No such contract is implied in an agreement by an appot. for a beneficiary certificate, contained in his application, that compliance on his part with all the laws, regulations, & requirements which were or might be thereafter enacted by the order was the express condition on which he was to be entitled to participate in the beneficiary fund.

Liabilities may be imposed upon members by changes in the constitution & bye-laws of the society, which did not exist when they became members.

R. S. O. 1897, c. 203, s. 164, does not create a personal liability to pay assessments where none exists apart from it; a suspended member is none the less a member of the society; & where there is a personal liability on his part to pay dues or assessments, that liability continues notwithstanding the suspension, not only as to dues & assessments payable at that time, but also as to those which become payable during the suspension, & before, by the operation of the rules, his default results in his ceasing to be a member; all conditions prescribed by the constitution in order to withdraw from membership must be rigorously observed. Notice to members of an assessment is not sufficiently proved by the fact that the official paper of the society was distributed by a distributing agency, without proof of delivery by the latter to the individual members.—Re ONTARIO INSURANCE ACT & SUPREME LEGION SELECT KNIGHTS OF CANADA (1899), 31 O. The member had executed a will, later in date than the nomination, disposing of his whole estate. The exor. acting under the will having brought an action against the nominee to recover, as part of the deceased's estate, the sum paid to her:—Held: on a construction of the rules of the assocn., the nomination merely conferred a title to collect the amount of the benefits payable on the death of the member, & the nominee was

Rules of society—Member in good standing.]—Where the rules of a benevolent society give to a member dissatisfied with a decision as to sick benefits, a right of appeal to a domestic forum, the widow of a member, whose appln. for sick benefits has in his lifetime been refused, & who has acquiesced in that decision & has not appealed, cannot recover sick benefits. Where, however, the widow of "a member in good standing" is entitled to certain pecuniary benefits & the status of the member has not been passed upon by the society in his lifetime, an action by the widow will lie, & the status of the deceased member at the time of his death is a question of law to be determined in the usual way. In the present case the fact that the deceased member was at the time of his death in arrear for dues was held, having regard to the constitution & rules of the society, not to deprive him of his status, & the widow was held entitled to recover.—*DALE v. 43. — To contribute to expenses—Of land held by trustees—Whether unallotted or forfeited.]—A land society was formed for the purchase of an estate to be sold in lots to the members, each of whom covenanted to abide by the rules of the society. The estate was purchased by trustees for the society, & the purchase money was secured by mtges. on which the trustees were liable. The estate was divided into numbered allotments, & a price set opposite each number to be paid by monthly instalments, & such allotments were to be allotted at that price unless previously sold by auction. By r. 35 members were required, in addition to the price of their allotments, to pay a proportionate part of the price, expenses, & interest payable in respect of allotments held from time to time by the trustees. The rules further provided for the forfeiture of allotments in case of default, & declared that the rights of the defaulting member in respect of such allotments should absolutely cease; they empowered the trustees to sell such forfeited allotments, & required them in the event of a sale, after deducting all moneys payable under the rules by the defaulting member, to pay him the surplus of the proceeds:—Held: unallotted & forfeited allotments were allotments held from time to time by the trustees within r. 35, & members were liable for contributions in respect thereof.—HILL v. CRANK (1892), 62 L. J. Q. B. 145; 68 L. T. 551; 9 T. L. R. 112, C. A.

44. Provisions for increase of—Whether ultra vires.]—The W. & S. Society was registered under 1893 Act, & under the rules its shares were transferable with the consent of the committee, but were not withdrawable, & the rules could be altered by the resolution of a three-fourths majority of the members. R. 12 required members to hold one share for every twenty acres farmed by them up to five hundred acres, & one share for every forty acres above five hundred, & by r. 13 the total number of shares held by any member was not to exceed £200 in nominal value. By r. 23, if the number of shares held by a member became less than the number required by r. 12, the amount paid up on the shares was to be repaid & the shares cancelled, & the member ceased to be a member. In Nov. 1921, r. 12 was amended by requiring members to hold five shares for every twenty acres farmed up to five hundred acres, & three shares for every forty acres above five hundred; & r. 23 was amended by providing that members holding less than the required number of shares should only be entitled to repayment, & to have their shares cancelled if the committee thought fit. In Dec. 1920, by amendment the nominal value of the shares was reduced to 6s. 8d. by cancelling the sum of 13s. 4d. on each share. Subsequently r. 12 was further amended so that members were required to hold shares of the nominal value of five pounds instead of five shares of 6s. 8d. each. The amendments were registered in accordance with the provisions of 1893 Act, s. 10 (2):—Held: (1) the law restricting the liability of members of a limited co. to the amount unpaid on their shares is applicable to industrial & provident societies, & therefore r. 12, both in its original form & as amended, was ultra vires & void; (2) although the rules of the society became, by 1893 Act, s. 22, a contract by each member with the society, they could not affect the liability of the members as limited by that statute to the amount unpaid upon their shares, & consequently the rules did not constitute or involve any contract as between pltf. & the society to take up from the society or pay to the society for any shares in addition to the shares held by him; (3) the reduction of capital, in the circumstances of this case, was ultra vires & void, since it was made as part of the scheme for imposing upon the members a liability for a larger sum than the amount unpaid on their shares, or to evade the provisions of 1893 Act, s. 4 (a).—DIBBLE v. WILTS & SOMERSET FARMERS, LTD., [1923] 1 Ch. 342; 92 L. J. Ch. 168; 128 L. T. 643; 39 T. L. R. 174; 67 Sol. Jo. 297.

Act, 1908 (c. 69), upon a member of the society or co., which in certain events involves a liability on the part of that member to take further shares in the society or co., can be enforced notwithstanding that the liability of the member to contribute in a winding up is limited by the Act under which the society or co. is registered. The limitation of liability in respect of shares held is distinct from an obligation collaterally imposed upon a member in certain events to take up further shares which will themselves, when taken up, be entitled to a similar limitation of liability. There is nothing in such a collateral obligation which is ultra vires or repugnant to the system of limited liability.—*AGRICULTURAL WHOLESALE SOCIETY v. He had conveyed the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to pltf. who claimed to redeem, on payment of the mtge. debt with interest, subscriptions, fines & other payments due from H. as member. The society claimed in addition to this the amount which H. had embezzled, contending that it came within the words “other moneys”:—Held: the words applied to debts, ejusdem generis with what had been mentioned before, & the sums which H. had embezzled were not ejusdem generis with the mtge. debt, interest, & subscriptions, but were due from H., on a totally different contract, & the society could not insist upon pltf. paying such sums before redeeming the property.—*BAILES v. 54. Assets charged partly chattels.]

—Upon a claim by a debenture holder in the winding up of a society incorporated under 1893 Act, to be declared a secured creditor, the question arose whether the debenture, by which the property of the society present & future was charged to secure the repayment of the principal sum & interest, was void by reason of the Bills of

Sale Acts, as to all or any of the assets of the society thereby charged:—Held: (1) the society was not an incorporated co. within the exception from Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (c. 43), mentioned in sect. 17 of that Act; (2) the property charged by the debenture, although described in general terms, was severable; & accordingly, the debenture was a valid charge upon such of the assets of the society as did not consist of personal chattels within Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), s. 4.—Re NORTH WALES PRODUCE & SUPPLY SOCIETY, [1922] 2 Ch. 340; 91 L. 56. “Dispute”—Claim that resolution ultra vires.]—The rules of an industrial & provident society, which substantially followed the terms of 1893 Act, s. 49, provided for the reference of all disputes between the society & its members to arbn. A member of the society commenced an action against the committee of management of the society for a declaration that certain resolutions passed by them were ultra vires the society, & for consequential relief:—Held: pltf.’s claim was a dispute within the arbn. rule & sect. 49, & the proceedings in the action must be stayed.

Where the rules of a registered society contain a provision for the reference of disputes between a member & the society & its officers to arbn. it is not an answer to an application for a stay of proceedings that the question at issue is whether or not the act complained of is ultra vires.—Cox v. HUTCHINSON, [1910] 1 Ch. 513; 79 L. J. Ch. 259; 102 L. T. 213; 26 T. L. R. 263; 54 Sol. Jo. 271.

57. — Claim that rules ultra vires.]—A co-operative society registered under 1893 Act, carried on the business of manufacturing for sale cheese & butter from milk supplied by certain of its members. By its amended rules the society bound itself to take all milk produced by members’ cows kept on any lands within a defined area, comprising some eighty townships, at the current price fixed by the committee, & r. 6 (2) provided that no member having milk to sell, the produce of cows kept within the defined area, should, without the previous consent of the committee, sell any such milk to any creamery other than the creamery of the society, or to any co., society or person who sold milk or manufactured butter for sale. Under r. 16 a member whose shares had been transferred or cancelled thereupon ceased to be a member, but a member was not otherwise entitled to withdraw from the society. R. 21 required the consent of the committee to any transfer of shares, but the committee were not bound to assign any reason for their refusal. The rules contained an arbn. clause providing for the reference of all disputes between the society & its members to the Irish Agricultural Organisation Society, whose award was to be final.

In an action by a member impeaching the validity of the rules:—Held: (1) a dispute whether certain rules of the society were ultra vires was not a dispute between a society & its members within 1893 Act, s. 49, & the action was competent.

(2) R. 6 (2), read in combination with r. 16, 21, imposed upon members a greater restraint than was reasonably required for the protection of the society, & was illegal as in restraint of trade & ultra vires the society.—*McELLISTRIM v. Nor, in any case, where deposits have been made on behalf of a society, are the managers compellable to appoint an arbitrator upon the application of individual members, not being the representatives of the whole or of a majority of such society. 63. decision by society in forty days.
—J., a member of an industrial society, nominated his daughter to receive his interest in the society, & died on May 19, 1898, without having revoked the nomination. Both his widow & the daughter claimed the amount standing to his credit in the books of the society. On Sept. 20, the daughter wrote a letter to the society nominating an arbitrator, & asking the society to name an arbitrator to act on their behalf in accordance with one of their rules. The society took no notice of this application, & on Oct. 10, the daughter gave notice that the arbitrator named in her former letter had been appointed by her as sole arbitrator under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 6 (b). The society replied that they would refuse to be bound by the decision of an arbitrator so appointed. On Nov. 1, the sole arbitrator gave an ex p. award in favour of the daughter. On Nov. 17, a plaint was taken out by the daughter in the county ct. under 1893 Act, s. 49, & the judge enforced the award in favour of the daughter. The society appealed on the ground that Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), could not apply, as sect. 6 (b) of that Act was inconsistent with 1893 Act, s. 49 (5):—Held: it was not necessary to decide whether Arbitration Act, 1889, was or was not applicable, since the plaint in the county ct., as the forty days mentioned in 1893 Act, s. 49 (5), had elapsed, might be regarded as an application under that subsect.—*JESSOP v. 68. ——— Parties—Necessary action by guardians for maintenance of pauper lunatic—Share of lunatic paid out to wife.]—(1) At the time of the

A., an industrial assurance co. in Sept. 1906, applied for & obtained a policy of insurance from B., another industrial assurance co. F. paid the weekly premium on both down to Dec. 19, 1906. F., thereafter applied for & obtained from B. a policy on the same terms as he got from A. The provisions of the new policy were more favourable to the assured than the removal of a pauper lunatic to an asylum there was standing to his credit in the books of a co-operative & industrial society the sum of £70. Upon the application of the lunatic's wife, who had also a fund standing to her credit in the books of the society, various payments were made to her out of the lunatic's fund. The society then received notice from the guardians of a claim against this fund for the maintenance of the lunatic; but, notwithstanding this notice, the society, purporting to act under 1893 Act, ss. 29, 30, transferred the balance of £55 to the wife's account in their books. Thereupon the guardians presented a petition in the county ct. against the society under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 300, for reimbursement out of the £55 of the cost of removal of the lunatic to the asylum, & of the expenses of his past & future maintenance:—Held: the transfer by the society of the £55 to the wife's account was not a good payment on the lunatic's behalf within 1893 Act, s. 29, & the guardians were entitled to be reimbursed the expenses in question.

(2) Although the wife ought to have been made a party to the petition, inasmuch as the objection as to want of parties had not been taken in the county ct., & was not put forward as a ground of appeal in the notice of appeal to the Div. SUB-SECT. 2.—JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.

See 1893 Act, ss. 58, 60; 1913 Act, s. 8.

78. Jurisdiction of High Court—Society registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1852 (c. 31)—Not registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87).—The Ct. of Ch. has no jurisdiction to wind up an industrial society under Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), even though there has been an omission to register it under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87).

An industrial society was duly registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1852 (c. 31); which Act was repealed by Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87). In Nov. 1862, before the society had been re-registered, an order for winding up the society was made by the Ct. of Ch. under Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89). In June, 1864, the society was registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87). On motion to discharge the order for winding up:—Held: the Ct. of Ch. had no jurisdiction to make the order, & it must be set aside accordingly.

The two winding up Acts of 1862, c. 87, & c. 89 were intended to apply each to a different class of co., the former to industrial & provident societies exclusively, & the other to joint-stock cos. The Ct. of Ch. has no jurisdiction in the winding up of the former class of cos., which must be carried on by the county ct.—Re CHATHAM CO-OPERATIVE INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY (1864), 4 New Rep. 481; 33 L. 80. — By way of appeal—From order of county court.—By Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87), s. 17, any society registered under that Act may be wound up in the same manner as any co. may be wound up under any Act for winding up cos., & all the provisions of such Act with respect to winding up are to apply to such society, except that the ct. having jurisdiction in the winding-up is to be the county ct.; & by Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), s. 124, appeals from any order by any ct. having jurisdiction in the winding-up may be had in the same manner as appeals from any order of the same ct. in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction.

The judge of a county ct. in which a society registered under Industrial & Provident Societies Act, 1862 (c. 87), was being wound up, having made an order to stay proceedings in an action [in the Liverpool Ct. of Passage] against a member of such society for a debt of the society incurred before such registration, & for which the member was therefore individually liable:—Held: no appeal against such order would lie to any of the superior cts. of common law. Qu.: whether the judge had power to make such order.—*HENDERSON v. 92. Extent of member's liability—Building societies distinguished.]—The rules of a society registered under the Provident & Industrial Societies Acts provided that its capital should be raised by shares of £5 each: that the subscription should be not less than 2s. 6d. on each share per month, but that a member should not be bound to pay any subscription after the first unless required by the directors; & that a member might withdraw all or any part of his subscriptions. They also provided that a member whose interest in the society was less than £100 might nominate persons to whom his shares were to be paid on his death, but in default of such nomination, or if a member whose interest exceeded £100 should die, his interest was to be payable or transferable only to his exors. Certain members had paid up the subscriptions on their shares in full, & then withdrawn part, & in some cases afterwards paid up part of the subscriptions so withdrawn. All these transactions were entered in the pass books of members & the books of the co. as payments & withdrawals on account of their shares. Some members had subscribed for one share only in order to obtain an advance & paid the first subscription of 2s. 6d. & had repaid the whole of the advance, but had not formally withdrawn their shares or obtained repayment of the 2s. 6d. Other members had died, having at the date of their death some subscriptions to their credit in respect of shares, & their exors. had not withdrawn the whole. The society was being wound up compulsorily. 1893 Act, requires that the rules should make provisions as to withdrawal of shares & provides that a member shall cease to be a member on withdrawal: Held: (1) so long as a member left any subscriptions standing to his credit in respect of shares, he was liable to pay, on calls made by the directors, or in a winding-up, the difference between the amount so standing to his credit & the nominal amount of the shares including subscriptions which he had paid up & then withdrawn; (2) the liability of a member was not terminated by his death: in this respect societies under this Act are to be distinguished from building societies; (3) the advanced members were liable for the difference between the £5 nominal amount of their share & the 2s. 6d. paid notwithstanding that they had repaid their advances.—Re UNITED SERVICE SHARE PURCHASE SOCIETY, LTD., [1909] 2 Ch. 526; 78 L. Applt., a member of the society, being unable owing to a strike to pay for goods supplied to him, the managing committee on four occasions debited the amount standing to his credit as a shareholder with sums due from him to the society for goods, the total amount so debited being about equal to the amount of his share capital; no notice under the rules to withdraw his capital had been given by applt. The society was in financial difficulties, & was at the date of the last two transactions hopelessly insolvent to the knowledge of the managing committee; but the committee, who had adopted the same course with other shareholders, acted bona fide & without intent to prefer any particular shareholder. Upon a summons taken out by the liquidator of the society to set aside the transactions:—Held: (1) the transactions were not to be treated as withdrawals of capital by applt., but were valid under 1893 Act, s. 23 (2), which gives to a society registered under the Act a lien upon the shares of a member & a right to set off any sum credited to a member upon his shares towards the payment of any debt due from him to the society; (2) the last transaction, although within three months of the passing of a resolution for winding up the society, was not void under Cos. SECT. 2.—DISSOLUTION BY INSTRUMENT.

See 1893 Act, ss. 58, 61; 1913 Act, s. 8.

97. Vesting of property—Power of court to appoint new trustee.]—The property of an incorporated industrial or provident society dissolved by instrument of dissolution under 1893 Act, ss. 58 & 61, is subject to a trust for appropriation & division, after providing for the claims of creditors, in accordance either with the provisions of the instrument or with the award of the chief registrar. Where dissolution took place before the society had handed over some of its property to the person nominated by the instrument of dissolution to realise its assets, the ct., the Crown not claiming the property as bona vacantia, appointed him a trustee in the place of the society, & made an order vesting the property in him on the trusts applicable thereto under the instrument.—Re RUDDINGTON LAND, [1909] 1 Ch. 701; 78 L. Part I.—In General.

SECT 1.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Infant—Of mature & of tender years—Not distinguished.]—The wife of a minor having committed adultery whilst her husband was abroad in the East Indies, the father procured himself to be appointed prochein ami, & commenced an action for crim. con. in his son's name, without his knowledge or authority, & recovered a verdict. On motion to set aside the proceedings, on the ground of there being no authority from the son to bring the action:—Held: (1) as deft. had reason to believe long before the trial, that the authority of the son could not have been obtained, he ought to have made inquiries then, & the application was now too late; (2) no authority from the son was necessary to enable the father to sue as prochein ami; & there being nothing to show that he was not properly appointed prochein ami, it must be assumed to have been properly done, & the son would be bound by the judgment in this action.

(3) The law knows of no distinction between infants of tender & of mature years; & as no special authority to sue is requisite in the case of an infant just born, so none is requisite from an infant on the very eve of attaining his majority. It appears perfectly clear that every prochein ami is to be considered as an officer of the ct., specially appointed by them to look after the interests of the infant, on whom the judgment in the action is consequently binding, & who cannot be allowed, on attaining his age, to commence fresh proceedings founded on the same cause of action (PARKE, B.).—MORGAN v. THORNE (1841), 7 M. & W. 400; H. & W. 149; 10 L. J. Ex. 125; 5 Jur. 294.

2. Child—Legitimate child presumed.]—We must take the “child” referred to by the certificate to be a legitimate child then in being (per CUR.).—R. v. WYKE (1746), Burr. S. C. 264.

Annotation:—Mentd. R. v. Basingstoke (1850), 14 L. T. O. S. 372.

3. ———.]—The law does not contemplate illegitimacy. The proper description of a legitimate child is “child.” We think therefore that the description here did import that the paupers were the children of married parents (DENMAN, C.J.).—*R. v. Part II.—The Crown as parens patriæ.

Wards of court.]—See Part XV., post.

Appointment of guardians by court.]—See Part XIII., Sect. 5, post.

14. Protection of infants by sovereign.]—

(1) The Crown has another jurisdiction, & that is as pater patriæ, as a father over his children. The king has a right to take care of infants, lunatics, & idiots, that cannot take care of themselves; & this case cannot be exercised otherwise than by appointing them proper curators or committees (per CUR.).

(2) It has been argued that the guardianship is a naked authority, & so cannot survive, but it is agreed that if it be an authority coupled with an interest, it will survive. Indeed, in the civil law they looked upon it as a naked authority, but yet where there were several guardians, & only one gave security, it was executed by him alone. . . . But if it were an authority, it is not like an authority to do a single act, where it must be done by them all; because it is the will of the party that authorises them all & so one alone can't execute it. But in this case the authority must, from the nature of the thing, be joint & several, for one alone must receive the money of the infant, & not meet all together for that purpose. . . . It is to be construed joint & several; else the more guardians were appointed for the security of the infant, he would be the less secure, because upon the death of any one of them the guardianship would be at an end. But no doubt with us it must be reckoned an interest (per CUR.).

(3) The guardian in socage has no interest of profit; it is an interest of honour . . . & can't be assignable (per CUR.).

(4) When the child is by the guardian put under the protection of this ct., it will be contempt even of the mother to marry him without the consent of the guardian (per CUR.).—SHAFTSBURY (EARL) v. SHAFTSBURY (1725), Gilb. Ch. 172; 25 E. R. 121; sub nom. EYRE v. SHAFTSBURY (COUNTESS), 2 P. Wms. 102; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 710, 755.

15. —.]—(1) A mother petitioned, that B. might be restrained from marrying her daughter, being an infant, & a ward of this ct. :—Held : as he was likewise an infant, his guardian should not permit him to marry the young lady, without the leave of the ct.

(2) The care of infants reverted to this ct. on the cessure of the ct. of wards. Exercised sometimes by way of punishment on such as have done an act to the prejudice of infants, but more usefully to restrain persons from doing an act to disparage them where it has not yet been completed.

This care of infants has been exercised by the ct. in different degrees & instances. Upon the cessure of the ct. of wards, the care of the government of infants reverted to this ct., to whom it originally belonged, & in respect of lunatics, idiots, & infants, the king is bound to take care of them; it is not a profitable jurisdiction of the Crown, but for the benefit of infants themselves, who must have some common parent. . . . The Crown therefore acts by way of analogy to the care & prudence of the natural parent, & for this reason, when infants under the care of this ct. are upon a treaty of marriage, the ct. refers it to a master to see, whether the settlement proposed is proper? If improper, the ct. will not give the infant leave to marry (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—SMITH v. SMITH (1745), 3 Atk. 304; 26 E. R. 977, L. C.

24. —.]—Concurrent jurisdiction of courts—Judicature Act, 1873 (c. 66).]—Since the passing of Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), the cts. of common law have concurrent jurisdiction with the cts. of equity with regard to the care & custody of infants; but, in the exercise of that jurisdiction, the rules of equity are to prevail. Before, however, the jurisdiction of the ct. to deprive a father of the guardianship of his children can be called into action, the ct. must be satisfied that he has so conducted himself, or placed himself in such a position, as to render it not merely better for the children, but essential for their safety & welfare in some very serious & important respect, that the father's acknowledged rights should be interfered with. Mere incontinence, or habits of intemperance, will not of itself justify the interference of the ct.

The affidavits of the mother & others, in answer to a rule for a habeas corpus by a father to remove his child, a boy of nine years, from the custody of the child's maternal grandfather, disclosing facts which showed appet. to be a person of intemperate & vicious life, & in the habit of using gross & disgusting language as well as personal violence to his wife, the ct. declined to interfere, the present custody of the child being unobjectionable.—Re GOLDSWORTHY (1876), 2 Q. 25. —.]—The Q. B. Div. has jurisdiction under Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), on an application by habeas corpus by a parent for the custody of an infant, to apply the rules of the ct. of Ch. with regard to the custody of infants; & therefore where a mother, the legal guardian of an infant, a female child of about the age of fifteen, applies by habeas corpus for the custody of such infant, the ct., if of opinion that it will not be for the welfare of the child that she should be given into the custody of the mother, will refuse to grant the application, even though the mother may not have been guilty of any misconduct disentitling her to the custody of her child.—*R. v. 26. ———.]—(1) The [Divorce] Ct. has power to make orders respecting the custody, maintenance, & education of children during the whole period of their infancy, that is, till they attain the age of twenty-one years.

The father's right to such custody exists until the child attains twenty-one (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(2) The jurisdiction of the Ct. of Ch. over infants is twofold. In so far as it depends on the law relating to writs of habeas corpus, the power of the ct. appears to have been the same as that of the cts. of common law. But, quite independently of those writs, the Ct. of Ch. exercised the powers of the Crown as parens patriæ over infants, & in exercise of this jurisdiction the power of the ct. has always been much more extensive than that possessed by cts. of common law under a writ of habeas corpus (LINDLEY, L.J.).

As regards maintenance, the parents' obligations were measured both at law & in equity by the Poor Laws. I know of no case in which a father has been ordered by a ct. of equity to maintain his child. Cts. of equity ordered children to be maintained out of their own property, but the jurisdiction as to maintenance & education was limited to such property. Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25 (10) . . . enables all Divisions of the High Ct., even on habeas corpus, to regard something more than the strict rights of fathers & guardians, & requires all the Divisions to recognise the cardinal principle on which the Ct. of Ch. always proceeded, namely, that in dealing with infants the primary consideration is their benefit (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*THOMASSET v. SECT. 1.—GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

27. Capacity to do binding acts for own benefit.]

—First the common rule is, that an infant in all things which found to his benefit shall have favour & preferment in law as well as another man, but shall not be prejudiced by anything to his disadvantage.—BASSET'S CASE (1557), 2 Dyer, 136 a; 73 E. R. 297, Ex. Ch.

28. ———.]—(1) Conveyance of an infant mtgee. is binding & cannot be avoided by entry during infancy.

The law, at the same time as it protects their [infants'] imbecility & indiscretion from injury through their own imprudence, enables them to do binding acts, for their own benefit; & without prejudice to themselves, for the benefit of others (LORD MANSFIELD).

(2) "All such gifts, grants or deeds made by infants, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand are void; but all gifts, grants or deeds made by infants, by matter in deed or in writing, which do take effect by delivery of his hand, are voidable by himself, by his heirs, & by those who have his estate." The words "which do take effect" are an essential part of the definition; & exclude letters of attorney, or deeds which delegate a mere power & convey no interest (LORD MANSFIELD).

(3) "The acts of an infant, which do not touch his interest, but take an effect from an authority which he is trusted to exercise, are binding," as

where an infant patron presents (LORD MANSFIELD).

(4) What seems decisive is "that the lessee can, in no case, avoid the lease, on account of the infancy of the lessor," which shows it not to be void, but voidable only; & it is better for infants that they should have an election (LORD MANSFIELD).—*ZOUCH d. SUB-SECT. 1.—TO ACT AS AGENT.

See, generally, AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 267-699.

35. General rule.]—(1) An infant cannot by settlement or otherwise give himself a power.

By a marriage settlement made in the name of a lady, then an infant, it was agreed that the intended husband & infant, & all other necessary parties would, as soon as the case would admit, assign unto the trustees of the settlement certain personal estate to which the infant became, under her father's will, entitled upon her marriage, upon trust for investment, with the consent of the husband & wife, & to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, & on her death to her husband for life, or until bkpcy. or alienation, & in trust for the issue of the marriage, & in default of issue becoming absolutely entitled in trust for such person or persons as the wife should by deed, with or without power of revocation & new appointment, or by will appoint, & in default of such appointment, if the wife should survive the husband, for the wife absolutely, but if he should survive her, in trust for the persons who, under Statute of Distribution, 1670 (c. 10), should be her next of kin. The infant by a deed-poll exercised the power of appointment by appointing the property, subject to the trusts in the settlement in favour of herself, husband & issue, to the husband absolutely, reserving to herself a power of revocation & new appointment. The wife died an infant without issue. Her interest in the fund agreed to be settled was at the date of the settlement, & at her death still remained reversionary, & no further settlement was made by the husband. The husband went into liquidation, & pltf. was appointed his trustee, & brought an action claiming the settled property against the next of kin, who also claimed it:—Held: (2) a power in gross to appoint personalty by deed can be exercised by an infant, & the settlement showed an intention that the power should be exercised during infancy.

(3) An infant may be an agent. An infant may be the donee of a power . . . in a will or other settlement as well as the donee of an ordinary power of attorney (JAMES, L.J.).—Re D'ANGIBAU, ANDREWS v. ANDREWS (1880), 15 Ch. D. 228; 49 L. J. Ch. 756; 43 L. T. 135; 28 W. R. 930, C. A.

36. Infant agent's liability to account—As factor.]—Though an infant may be an exor. & shall be charged because the law enables him; so he may be charged in trover, because a tort, yet neither on a contract, nor as bailiff, nor for goods to carry on a trade, can he be charged; & therefore when they are made factors, security ought to be taken from their friends, for their accounting (per CUR.).—SMALLY v. SMALLY (1700), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 283; 21 E. R. 831.

37. Bill of exchange—Signed for father.]—Evidence that the son of deft., a minor, has in three or four instances signed bills of exchange for his father, is sufficient in an action against the father on a guarantee, to warrant the reading of an instrument, purporting to a guarantee by the father in the handwriting of the son.—*WATKINS v. But if the feoffment be executed by letter of attorney, it is void, & the land shall escheat.

(2) There is a difference between a title of entry by reason of a condition & a right of entry by reason of infancy. None shall take benefit of the infancy of his ancestor, but he who has a right descended to him from the same ancestor; but the heir may take benefit of a condition, although no right descends from the same ancestor.

As to the condition in law which is founded upon skill & confidence, as the offices of parkership, stewardship, etc., in fee, which descend to an infant or a feme covert, if the condition in law annexed to the offices be broken, it shall bar the infant & feme covert for ever (per CUR.).

62. Liability as drawer—Ratification after full age—Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 2.]—Above sect. which enacts that no action shall be brought on any ratification made after full age of a contract made during infancy, applies to ratifications made after the passing of the Act, of contracts made before that time. An infant before the passing of the Act gave a bill of exchange, payable after his majority, to a jeweller in payment for jewelry. After his majority, & after the Act came into operation, the creditor obtained judgment by default against him in an action on the bill of exchange, & then took out a debtor's summons, & on his failing to comply with it, filed a petition for adjudication against him:—Held: the Ct. of Bkpcy. would look into the consideration for the judgment; & if the conduct of the debtor, in allowing judgment to go by default against him, operated as a ratification of the bill of exchange, such ratification was rendered void by above sect.; & the petition for adjudication was consequently dismissed.—*Re ONSLOW, Ex p. The action was compromised on terms that deft. should give two acceptances for £50 each, & one of his co-defts. an acceptance for £80, the other deft. being discharged from the action. One of the bills given by deft. to the brokers was indorsed by the latter to pltf., who had acted as their solr. in the action, & who took the bill with notice of the circumstances under which it was given:—Held: the transaction merely amounted to a promise made by deft. after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy, or to a ratification made by him after full age of a promise or contract made during

Issue being joined upon the replication to this plea, it was proved, that the drawer, the acceptor, & the indorsee, all resided in London, & that deft. attained his majority on Mar. 11, 1851:—Held: upon this evidence, the jury were warranted in finding that the bills were accepted by deft. whilst he was an infant, a bill of exchange, in the absence of proof to the contrary, being presumably accepted within a reasonable time after its date, & before its maturity.—ROBERTS v. The infant had no occasion to run any score at all, being allowed 7s. a week by his guardian. . . . Every item in the bill is for meat & drink for himself & a dog. & unless he be estopped by some act at full age of as high authority as the bond, he shall avoid it.

But how do these authorities affect a case like the present, where it is clear upon the face of the instrument that it is to the prejudice of the infant, for it is an obligation with a penalty & for payment of interest? . . . In Zouch v. Abbot & Hallet v. Parsons, No. 28, ante, where this subject was much considered I find nothing to show that an infant may bind himself to his prejudice. It is the privilege of the infant that he shall not, & we should be breaking down the protection which the law has cast around him, if we were to give effect to a confirmation by parol of a deed like this made by him during infancy (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).

(2) In the case cited of the infant lessee it was equivocal in the constitution of that estate whether it was not for his benefit; a possession was given him & a right to the estate, therefore it was equivocal whether it might not be for his benefit, & then he continues after full age & adopts it. In the case of the infant lessor, that being a lease rendering rent, imported on the face of it a benefit to the infant & his accepting the rent at full age was conclusive that it was for his benefit (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—*BAYLIS v. The co. was afterwards wound up; & as it appeared that G. was an infant, D. was placed on the list as contributory in respect of these shares, & had paid £1,300, for calls on them. D. commenced an action against N. to recover the £1,300, & N. then filed the bill in this suit against D. & E. the father of G., alleging that E. was the real purchaser of the shares & liable for any loss, & praying that the action might be restrained, & that the questions might be decided in the suit. The judge having granted the injunction, D. appealed:—Held: D. ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of establishing his claim & of recovering, if he could, against N., merely because another person might also be liable to pay the money, & might be the person who ultimately would have to pay.—*NICKALLS v. SECT. 13.—PUBLIC AND OTHER OFFICES AND POSITIONS.

85. Office of public & pecuniary trust — Clerk of court.]—An infant cannot be appointed to the office of clerk of a ct. of requests, where it is part of the duty of that officer to receive the money of the suitors.

No authority has been cited to show that the grant of an office of public & pecuniary trust to an infant is valid. It is true that the offices of sheriff & of gaoler have been granted in fee & that such grants are not void, on the ground that those offices may by descent vest in an infant. In those cases, however, the grantees have the power of appointing deputies. . . . Looking at this Act of Parliament, it appears that this is an office of pecuniary trust, & it seems to me, therefore, impossible to allow the grant of such an office to an infant, for in the event of him being guilty of negligence, the suitors of the ct. might be deprived of that remedy which they ought to have against a public officer entrusted with their money (ABBOTT, C.J.).—CLARIDGE v. EVELYN (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 81; 106 E. R. 1123.

87. Office for which officer can appoint deputy — Sheriff.]—A grant by the bishop of the office of register of a diocese, in reversion after the death of the tenant for life, to an infant of eleven years of age, exercendum per se vel deputatum sufficientem, is good, notwithstanding the infancy; but if he make an insufficient deputy, it is a forfeiture of the office.

As an infant may have an office by descent, as to be sheriff or warden of the Fleet & the like, which are offices of charge & of trust, so he may have an office by grant. . . . Also if it had fallen unto him at the time of the grant, he was then of such age as by intendment he might have written the acts & orders, etc., & made election of a sufficient deputy (per CUR.).—YOUNG v. SECT. 14.—POWERS.

See, generally, POWERS.

100. General rule.]—(1) As to the general question concerning powers, it must be admitted there are some kind of powers an infant may execute; as where he is a mere instrument or conduit pipe, where no prudence or discretion is required, or where his right is not affected (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

(2) But that is different from these powers. These powers over real estate were introduced by Statute of Uses, 1534 (c. 11); for before that they were done by way of condition. At common law an infant might have performed a condition; that is a condition for his benefit; so he might make a feoffment for his benefit; as if he had an estate on condition to make a feoffment of part of it to J. S. or else to lose the whole estate. But, as to the other kind of powers to be executed by infants, I find no authority for it. . . . Taking it therefore in general, I am of opinion, an infant cannot execute a power [i.e. a power of appointment over real estate] (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

(3) An infant may undoubtedly present to a church. He may present by guardian, if only a month old; & the strong ground of that is, there is no inconvenience; because the bishop is to judge of the clerk's ability (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—*HEARLE v. 101. —.]—The exercise by an infant of a power simply collateral being valid both as to real & personal estate, the first question I have to consider is, as regards personal estate, what becomes of a power in gross. . . . I had better state what I mean, because the words are used in so many different senses by different writers. The first power, a power simply collateral, I understand to be a power given to a person who has no interest whatever in the property over which the power is given. The second power, a power in gross, is a power given to a person who has an interest in the property over which the power extends, but such an interest as cannot be affected by the exercise of the power. The most familiar instance is that of a tenant for life with a power of appointment after his death. The third kind of power is a power exercisable by a person who has an interest in the property, which interest is capable of being affected, diminished or disposed of to some extent by the exercise of the power. That power is commonly called a power appendant or appurtenant. As regards the first power, that is, a power collateral, it is settled . . . that that power can be exercised by an infant. On principle, it is very difficult to see why it is so settled. I mean, it is very difficult to see why, if discretion is required for the disposal of property, it should not be so in the case of the exercise of a power; & one would think there is as much judgment or discretion wanted for the exercise of a power as for the disposal of property. However, as the law stands, that appears not to be so; & the reason, if reason is to be found anywhere, seems to be this, that it requires more discretion to dispose of your own property than to dispose of other people's. That is the only reason I can find. We find expressions such as WOOD, V.C., used in King v. Bellord, No. 105, post, of the infant being, in exercising the power, "a mere conduit-pipe"; but, on principle, it is very difficult to understand that the same amount of discretion or judgment should not be required in both cases, & that an infant can actually distribute property of other people though the same infant cannot dispose absolutely of a shilling of his own property (JESSEL, M.R.).—*Re D'ANGIBAU, ANDREWS v. 102. Capacity to confer power on self.]—Re D'ANGIBAU, ANDREWS v. ANDREWS, No. 35, ante.

103. Power without an interest—Capacity.]—

(1) Power to revoke the uses of a settlement reserved to the settlor "or any of the heirs of his body," well executed by the heir of his body, being a feme covert & an infant; because it is for her benefit, & consistent with the intention of the settlement.

(2) Regularly by law, coverture or infancy debar the party from making any deed or writing to dispose of any estate or interest.

(3) If a conveyance be to the use of J. S. & the heirs of his body with power for him or the heirs of his body to make leases, the heir of his body, being a feme covert, without her husband, or infant, cannot make such a lease while the disability continues.

(4) In case of a bare power an infant, or a feme covert, may transfer an estate as an instrument or conduit pipe of one who is able, as an infant may give livery on a feoffment as an attorney; so may feme covert though it be to her own husband.

(5) Without doubt a power may be in a feoffment to the use of A. that A. may make leases whether within age or of full age, or covert, or sole.

(6) If an infant feme sole to whom a general power, not collateral, of leasing is given & she take husband & then make a lease, it is avoidable.

PART III. SECT. 14.

P. Over personalty.]—An infant cannot exercise a power over personal property though authorised to do so by the instrument creating the power which goes to defeat his or her interest therein.—Re ARMIT'S TRUSTS (1871), 5 L. R. Eq. 352.—IR.

Sect. 14.—Powers. Sect. 15: Sub-sects. 1, 2 & 3.]

(7) The reason why in any cases of powers infancy or coverture hinders the execution of them, is in respect to the prejudice to the person revoking.

(8) By the presumption of law they [infants] are not fit to dispose of estates, or to have power to dispose of them to their own prejudice. . . . In those Acts that concern the disposition of an estate or interest the reason of the law turns, in case of infancy or coverture, upon the point of prejudice, or not prejudice, unto their interest.

(9) An infant, though he cannot grant the next avoidance, yet he may present to the bishop; for that presentation ought to be without money.

(10) An infant cannot surrender a lease; yet if he take a new lease for a greater interest, it is good till avoided by him; if for the same term & no more, it is void, because it is without increase of term, or decrease of rent; & his acts are merely void where there is not apparent benefit, or semblance of a benefit.—GRANGE v. 105. Power of sale.]—There can be no doubt upon the authorities from the earliest times that if a man, by his will, gives an infant a simple power of sale without an interest the infant may exercise it. . . . It is to be observed that all the cases relied on with reference to powers have gone upon the principle that the infant, in executing the power, is a mere conduit pipe, as it has been termed, of the will of the donor of the power; so that when the estate is created, the infant . . . is merely the instrument by whose hands testator or donor acts. The donor it is said may use any hand however weak to carry out his intentions. This principle fails altogether to reach the case of a devise in trust to an infant (WOOD, V.C.).—KING v. BELLORD (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 343; 2 New Rep. 442; 32 L. J. Ch. 646; 8 L. T. 633; 11 W. R. 900; 71 E. R. 149.

109. — Intention of donor—For exercise during minority.]—An infant can exercise a power, even though it be coupled with an interest, where an intention appears that it should be exercisable during minority.

certain funds belonging to her were vested in trustees upon trust to retain existing investments, or reinvest "with the consent" of the lady & her husband during their joint lives; the lady taking the first life interest under the settlement:—Held: the lady had power to consent to a proposed re-investment, notwithstanding her minority.—Re CARDROSS'S SETTLEMENT (1878), 7 Ch. 110. —.]—Testator by his will settled a legacy of £50,000 upon usual trusts for A., his wife & issue, & declared that if no issue of A. should attain a vested interest then the legacy should fall into & form part of his, testator's, residuary estate, & testator empowered the trustees on A.'s marriage & with his consent to revoke the trusts & to resettle the legacy upon such trusts for the benefit of A., his wife & issue, & with such powers & provisions as the trustees should deem proper. By a codicil testator bequeathed a sum of £50,000 to his trustees to be held by them upon the trusts & with powers for the benefit of B., her husband & issue, similar to those for the benefit of A., his wife & issue, declared in his will concerning the £50,000 thereby settled, except that no part of the capital was to be paid or advanced to or for the benefit of B. Both A. & B. were infants at the date of the will. After the death of testator B. married, being still an infant, & by a deed executed in contemplation of her marriage the trustees with her consent & in exercise of the power conferred on them by the will & codicil revoked the trusts of her legacy & resettled same upon trusts for her benefit, & her husband & issue, which varied somewhat from those declared in the will; in particular the ultimate trust in default of her issue was for her absolutely. On the question whether the resettlement was valid having regard to the fact that B. was an infant:—Held: (1) upon the true construction of the will & codicil testator intended to confer a power on B. during her minority to consent to an exercise by the trustees of their power of revocation & resettlement, & he could lawfully confer such a power upon her; (2) the ultimate trust in the resettlement, in default of B.'s issue for B. absolutely, was prohibited by the codicil, & therefore not authorised by the power to resettle.—*Re SUTTON, BOSCAWEN v. 120. — Soon after coming of age — Viewed with suspicion.]—A bill brought after an acquiescence of five years, & after a mother's death against her representative, to set releases aside, as unduly obtained by her, & for an account of his father's & grandmother's estates, & to be paid his full share thereof. The procuring releases from a person immediately upon his coming of age is always a circumstance to create a suspicion of unfairness, but as there was no particular imposition charged through means of debt, the ct. would not determine the question as to the unfairness of the releases, till the master had taken the account of the father's personal estate only.—STEADMAN v. PALLING (1746), 3 Atk. 423; 26 E. R. 1044, L. C.

121. — — — Professing to proceed upon examination of complicated accounts.]—Degree of weight to be attached to deeds of release executed by cestuis que trust within a few days of their respectively coming of age, when such releases profess to proceed upon the examination of complicated accounts.

The bill stated that an account had been made out, showing that a certain sum was due to pltf., & it alleged that debts set up that account & the payment of the balance, as a final settlement. The bill charged the contrary, & that much more was due to pltf., as would appear if certain accounts were rendered. A deed of release had, in fact, been executed by pltf. at the time of the payment of the balance in question, but the bill made no mention of it. As this deed of release acknowledged the receipt of certain sums, it could not be wholly set aside; but the ct. was of opinion, in the circumstances of the case, that it did not deprive pltf. of his right to the accounts which he sought. Semble: the proper form of the decree in such case is to declare that pltf. is entitled to the accounts, notwithstanding the provisions of the deed of release; but a decree which directed the accounts without noticing the deed of release, was not considered to require alteration.—WEDDERBURN v. SECT. 2.—BINDING CONTRACTS.

See Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62).

131. General rule — Binding when for infant's benefit.]—An infant may sue on a contract of marriage with a person of full age.

The single question is whether this contract, as against pltf., was absolutely void. We are all of opinion that this contract is not void, but only voidable at the election of the infant, & as to the person of full age, it absolutely binds. The contract of an infant is considered in law as different from the contracts of all other persons. In some cases his contract shall bind him; such is the contract of an infant for necessaries, & the law allows him to make this contract as necessary for his preservation; & therefore in such case a single bill shall bind him, though a bond with a penalty shall not. Where the contract may be for the benefit of the infant, or to his prejudice, the law so far protects him as to give him an opportunity to consider it when he comes of age; & it is good or voidable at his election. But though the infant has this privilege, yet the party with whom he contracts has not; he is bound in all events. As marriage is now looked upon to be an advantageous contract, & no distinction holds whether the party suing be man or woman, but the true distinction is whether it may be for the benefit of the infant; we think that though no express case upon a marriage contract can be cited, yet it falls within the general reason of the law with regard to infants' contracts; & no dangerous consequence can follow from this determination, because our opinion protects the infant, even more than if we rule the contract to be absolutely void. As to persons of full age, it leaves them where the law leaves them, which grants them no such protection against being drawn into inconvenient contracts (LORD RAYMOND, C.J.).—HOLT v. CLARENCIEUX (WARD) (1732), 2 Stra. 937; 2 Barn. K. B. 173; Fitz.-G. 275; 93 E. R. 954.

133. — — — At time of agreement.]—MAD-DON d. BAKER v. WHITE, No. 619, post.

134. — — —.]—An infant slave in the West Indies, executed an indenture, by which he covenanted to serve B. for a certain term of years as his servant, & B. covenanted to do certain things on his part: B. then came to England with the slave. In an action against A. who had seduced him from the service of B., A. was not permitted to allege that the contract was void, as being made by an infant & a slave, & therefore that the declaration, which stated him to have been retained as a servant for a term of years, was not proved; for the ct. held that the effect of such a contract might be the manumission of the slave, & consequently that it was for his own benefit, & being for his own benefit, that it was, at most, only voidable by the infant himself.

We have seen that some contracts of infants, even by deed, shall bind them. Some are merely void, namely such as the ct. can pronounce to be to their prejudice. Others, & the most numerous class, of a more uncertain nature as to benefit or prejudice, are voidable only, & it is in the election of the infant to affirm them or not. . . . Upon the distinction between those two species of contracts, we certainly are not warranted to decide, that a contract which may have the effect of emancipation, & which certainly puts the infant in no worse condition than he was in before, is so prejudicial to him as to be merely void. If it be a contract voidable only, the infant may affirm it (EYRE, C.J.).—KEANE v. BOYCOTT (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 511; 126 E. R. 676.

SECT. 4.—VOIDABLE CONTRACTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—WHAT CONTRACTS ARE VOIDABLE.

161. Meaning of voidable contract—Valid until avoided.]—The Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), does not apply to a marriage settlement executed by an infant; but such a settlement is, as against the infant, voidable only; that is to say, valid until repudiated within the time & in the manner allowed by law.

Such contracts are, with some exceptions, valid until repudiated. It was suggested in argument that "voidable" may equally well signify "invalid until confirmed"; but to my mind that apart from the ordinary use of language, does not express the technical sense of the word (KEKEWICH, J.).—DUNCAN v. DIXON (1890), 44 Ch. D. 211; 59 L. J. Ch. 437; 62 L. T. 319; 38 W. R. 700; 6 T. L. R. 222.

The rights of third persons, accrued before such signature by an infant is avoided, remains good, notwithstanding its subsequent avoiding by the infant.—Re LAXON & Co. (2), [1892] 3 Ch. 555; 67 L. T. 85; 40 W. R. 621; 8 T. L. R. 666; 36 Sol. Jo. 609.

The necessity had been urgent, the terms of the deed fair, & the money had been duly applied; but the guardians had not obtained the sanction of the ct. On its being contended that the mtge. was invalid & incapable of being enforced :—Held : a mtge. so executed was not void, but only voidable; & debt. was entitled to avoid the mtge., but only on the condition of restoring any benefit received by him thereunder to the person from whom it had been received.

In May, 1882, an infant purchased a plot of freehold land from the trustees of a building society of which he was a member & a committee-man. In July of that year he came of full age. For four & a half years he paid monthly instalments of the purchase money, & acted as a committee-man :—Held : he had ratified the contract, & was liable under its provisions.—WHITTINGHAM v. 168. ———.]—(1) It has been clearly held that contracts of apprenticeship & with regard to labour are not contracts to an action on which the plea of infancy is a complete defence, & the question has always been, both at law & in equity, whether the contract, when carefully examined, in all its terms is for the benefit of the infant (KAY, L.J.)

(2) That raises this question of law, whether this is a contract which he can now repudiate, he being still an infant. I am of opinion, without going again through the cases that have been cited, that the answer to this proposition depends on whether on the true construction of the contract as a whole, it was for his advantage. If it was not so, he can repudiate it; but if it was for his advantage, it was not a voidable contract, but one binding on him, which he had no right to repudiate (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(3) It is for the ct under these circumstances to say what is the construction of the contract, & . . . whether it is clearly & manifestly for the benefit of the infant (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—CLEMENTS v. Sect. 4.—Voidable contracts: Sub-sect. 2.]

It has been urged for pltf. that it is incumbent on deft. to show that an infant can enter into a trading contract. The general law is that the contract of an infant may be avoided or not, at his option. As to the case put, the infant could maintain no such action; for he cannot perform the duties of a steward, & the law would not compel the lord to make an unavailing appointment (GIBBS, C.J.).—BRUCE v. WARWICK (1815), 6 Taunt. 118; 128 E. R. 978, Ex. Ch.; affg. S. C. sub nom. WARWICK v. BRUCE (1813), 2 M. & S. 205.

179. — Marriage settlement.] — A marriage settlement, the husband being adult & the wife a minor, is binding on the former, though not on the latter.

In 1839 A. B. married a ward of ct. without leave; articles were executed both before & after the marriage. In 1840 a reference was made to approve of a settlement, but nothing was done thereon. In 1850 the parties executed a settlement of the wife's real estate without the sanction of the ct. In a suit instituted by the wife to annul the articles & confirm the settlement:—Held: in 1852, the power of the ct. was not affected by the lapse of time, the parties coming to the ct. had given it authority to do what was right, & a reference must be made to the master to report as to the propriety of the settlement of 1850, & whether it ought to be varied, & to approve of a settlement of the wife's personal estate.—CAVE v. CAVE (1852), 15 Beav. 227; 51 E. R. 524.

180. Party privy to infant.] — A. sold goods to an infant, & delivered them to B. for the purpose of being worked up by him for the vendee. The vendee afterwards, & after a portion of the goods had been used in performance of the work, went with A. to B.'s shop, & desired that the remainder might be returned to A., B. thereupon said, "I will return them or pay for them" at a price then agreed upon:—Held: it was competent to A. thus to rescind the contract without writing; & supposing the agreement so to do was one which the infant himself might have repudiated, it was not competent to B. to object that the rescission was void, as not being for the infant's benefit.

An infant, or one in privity to him, may object to a contract on the ground that it was not for his benefit (JERVIS, C.J.).—DOUGLAS v. WATSON (1856), 17 C. B. 685; 139 E. R. 1245.

181. — How determined.]—By a marriage settlement the father of the intended husband, then a minor, covenanted with the trustees to pay them an annuity during the life of the intended wife or of any child or grandchild of the marriage, & the trustees were to pay the annuity to the husband during his life or until his bkpcy., & after determination of his interest for the benefit of the wife & the issue of the marriage. The settlement contained an agreement by the husband to vest in the trustees upon certain trusts all property to which he should become entitled under the will of his father. The husband came of age about a month after he had executed the settlement. The father died nearly four years afterwards, leaving property by will to his son. More than a year after his father's death the husband repudiated the settlement:—Held: the settlement was as regards the husband voidable, not void; if he chose to repudiate it he must do so within a reasonable time after he came of age; he must be treated as knowing the contents of the deed whether he knew them or not; & his repudiation not being made within a reasonable time, he was bound by the settlement.

It seems to me that in measuring a reasonable time, whether in point of fact he had or had not acquainted himself with the nature of the obligations which he had undertaken is wholly immaterial. The time must be measured in precisely the same way whether he had so made himself acquainted or not. I do not say that he was under any obligation to make himself acquainted. . . All I say is this, that he cannot maintain that the reasonable time when measured must be a longer time because he has chosen not to make himself acquainted with the nature of the deed which he has executed (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—EDWARDS v. infant of waiving & disagreeing to a purchase which he has made; & if he waives it, the estate acquired by the purchase is at an end . . . As the estate vests, as it certainly does, the burthen upon it must continue to be obligatory until a waiver or disagreement by the infant takes place, which, if made after full age, avoids the estate altogether, & reverts it in the party from whom the infant purchased; if made within age, it suspends it only, because such disagreement may be again recalled, when the infant attains his majority. . . . e. ———.]—E., an infant, made a conveyance of land to J., who entered into possession. After E. came of age he made a second conveyance to M., but did no other act of avoidance of his former deed, & M. entered upon the land:—Held: E. had not avoided his conveyance to J.—JOHNSON v. MCKAY (1883), 2 N. Z. L. R. 156 (S. C.).—N.Z.

f. ——— Solicitors threatening proceedings & issuing writ—Qualified by infant's statement.]—R., in 1896, being then an infant, executed a mtge. in favour of S. R. came of age on Jan. 27, 1900, & at that time, on account of default having been made in the payment of the loan, S. was proceeding to sell under power of sale in the mtge. R.'s solrs., on Feb. 13, 1900, wrote S., saying that no valid mtge. had ever been executed by R., & threatening proceedings to protect their client's interests, & on Mar. 2 they issued a writ on behalf of R. against S. claiming a declaration that the mtge. was null & void, & an injunction restraining sale. On cross-examination on an affidavit made by R. in support of a motion for an interim injunction, he said, in substance, that the reason he did not pay was because he couldn't, & that he had never repudiated his contract, & in Oct. 1900, he discontinued his action. On Nov. 2, 1900, S. commenced his foreclosure action, & in defence R. pleaded infancy:—Held: the solr.'s letter & the writ did not constitute repudiation, as they were qualified by R.'s statement that he did not intend to repudiate.—SAUNDERS v. RUSSELL (1904), 9 B. C. R. 321.—CAN.

g. Avoidance of insurance.]—Action on a promissory note given in payment of the first premium on a policy of life insurance. Deft. pleaded that he was a minor when the contract was made; that it was disadvantageous to him, as it absorbed nearly all his annual revenue; & that as soon as his tutor had heard of it he had served

Promises of marriage by infants, see HUSBAND & WIFE, Vol. XXVII., pp. 25, 26, Nos. 16–22.

191. What constitutes ratification—Payment of purchase-money — Payment by instalments.] — WHITTINGHAM v. MURDY, No. 167, ante.

192. Whether ratification or fresh promise—Question for jury.]—Deft. during his infancy made an offer of marriage to pltf. which she accepted subject to the approval of his parents. He afterwards gave her an engagement ring, which she wore; & two days before he attained his majority he went into the country to visit his father, & on his return, the day after he came of age, he saw pltf., & told her that he had explained all to his father, & that he assented to the engagement, adding, "Now I may & will marry you as soon as I can":—Held: it was properly left to the jury to say whether this was a fresh absolute promise to marry, or merely a ratification of the original promise made during infancy, so as to be avoided by the operation of the Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 2.—NORTH-COTE v. DOUGHTY (1879), 4 C. P. D. 385.

193. — Ratification of original promise.]—A promise of marriage is within the Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 2. Therefore no action can be brought for the breach of a promise of marriage made during infancy, notwithstanding a ratification of such promise has been made after full age. Ratification in such case would have reference to the original promise, & therefore would not be evidence of a new or fresh promise.—COXHEAD v. MULLIS (1878), 3 C. P. D. 439;

a protest on the co. on the ground that the contract was injurious to his pupil:—Held: deft. had established his plea, & it was not his interest to have so large an insurance, especially as his health was not good, & the premium took up nearly all of his fixed income.—IMPERIAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. CHARLEBOIS, 22 C. L. T. 417.—CAN.

PART V. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 3.

h. What constitutes ratification — Conduct.]—L. bound himself to H. under articles of clerkship, but being a minor his father was also made a party to the articles. The father covenanted, in addition to the usual covenants, that L. on admission as a solr. would not practice in the town of T. or within a radius of 50 miles thereof, & that he would pay the sum of £2,000 as liquidated damages to H. on breach of this covenant. The father in addition covenanted that L. would, & L. also covenanted for himself that he would, on coming of age enter into a like covenant. During the currency of the articles H. by virtue of a power conferred therein & at the request of L. assigned them to his partner. L. on coming of age was not formally requested to, & did not, enter into the covenant referred to, but continued service under the articles for a period of two years after attaining his majority; & was admitted as a solr. He afterwards commenced practice in the town of T.:—Held: L. had ratified & adopted the articles.—HAMILTON v. LETHBRIDGE (1912), 14 C. L. R. 236.—AUS.

k. — Assignments by a minor to his tutor (though voidable), impeached after a lapse of years, sustained, the evidence establishing that subsequent dealings had taken place between the minor & tutor, after the former was of age, which amounted to a release of all claims on the part of the minor.—MOTZ v. MOREAU (1859–61), 13 Moo. P. C. C. 376; 15 E. R. 142.—CAN.

l. — Pltf. being at the time an infant, on Feb. 20, 1878, executed a mtge. in favour of defts. The proceeds were chiefly applied in paying off prior incumbrances on the land. Pltf. came of age on Apr. 19, 1880. After this date, & with full knowledge of his position, he, on Jan. 10, 1881, executed another mtge., with the object of in part paying off the mtge. in question; & moreover, by certain conversations with an agent of defts. he admitted his liability under the latter mtge. nor did he take any steps to disaffirm it until Sept. 7, 1882. On Sept. 30, 1882, this action was commenced:—Held: the mtge. in question was not void, but only voidable, & pltf.'s conduct after he came of age amounted to a ratification of it.—FOLEY v. CANADA PERMANENT LOAN & SAVINGS CO. (1882), 4 O. R. 38.—CAN.

m. — Acquiescence.]—D.'s father died in 1847. His will, purporting to devise all his real estate to his wife in fee, was not duly executed, & D. became entitled as heir-at-law. Three months before D. came of age he agreed with P. for the sale to him of the real estate for value. A conveyance to P. was prepared by D., & executed by his mother, the devisee under the father's will, D. being a witness to it. P. afterwards sold & conveyed his interest, & D. brought ejectment against the purchaser. D. had at various times acquiesced in the sale after he became of age:—Held: D.'s conduct & his subsequent acquiescence after his attaining

194. — Evidence of fresh promise.]—When both pltf. & deft. were under age, deft. made an express promise to marry the pltf., which she accepted, but no time for the marriage was then fixed. For some years afterwards, & after deft. had come of age, the parties remained on the footing of engaged lovers, & at last, the deft. being then of age, the day of their marriage was fixed, pltf. naming the day at the request of deft. to do so. Ultimately deft. refused to marry. In an action for breach of promise of marriage:—Held: assuming the case of Coxhead v. Mullis, No. 193, ante, to be rightly decided, & a contract to marry is within the Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), & therefore not capable of being ratified by an infant after he comes of age, there was here evidence from which a jury ought to find a fresh promise to marry made after deft. had come of age, as distinguished from a mere ratification of the promise to marry which had been made during deft.'s infancy.—DITCHAM v. WORRALL (1880), 5 C. P. D. 410; 49 L. J. Q. B. 688; 43 L. T. 286; 44 J. P. 799; 29 W. R. 59.

195. — Contract of personal service—Continuance of service after majority.]—In Sept. 1886, deft. agreed to serve pltf., a firm of law accountants, at a weekly salary of 30s., or such other sum as might be agreed upon, & at the expiration of the agreement not to seek employment from or do work for persons who might at majority, estopped him from denying the validity of the sale.—LEARY v. ROSE (1863), 10 Gr. 346.—CAN.

n. — Mere acquiescence for about two & a half months, after attaining majority was considered insufficient to operate as a ratification of a conveyance.—WHALLS v. LEARN (1888), 15 O. R. 481.—CAN.

o. — A. sued in 1885 to recover certain estates from B., alleging claim under his adoption which took place in 1865. In 1875 A., being still a minor, relinquished by deed his claim to the estates for £12,000, but now alleged that he thought he was relinquishing it only in favour of deft.'s predecessor in title who died in 1883, having been in possession of the estates since 1867. Pltf. attained his majority in 1878:—Held: assuming pltf. was a minor of fifteen years of age at the date of the deed of relinquishment, it was not likely he would not have understood its effect, or that he failed to ascertain it when he attained his majority in 1878: his conduct of acquiescence in the deed of relinquishment amounted to ratification of it.—VENKATACHALAM v. MAHALAKSHMAMMA (1886), 1 L. R. 10 Mad. 272.—IND.

p. — Continuing in possession of land—Sale & exchange.]—An exchange of lands by an infant is not void, but voidable only, & as such may be rendered valid by acts of confirmation. Where therefore, a party said to have been under age & intoxicated when he made an exchange of lands, continued, after coming of age, in possession of the property received in exchange, & afterwards sold or exchanged it for other property, it was considered such a confirmation as barred those claiming under him from any time up to the expiration of the agreement have employed pltf's. At the time of the execution of the agreement deft. was a minor. After attaining twenty-one he continued in pltf.'s service for over four years, & his wages were raised from time to time. He left in Apr. 1892, & sought & obtained employment from persons who prior to that date were customers of pltf's. —Held: it ought to be inferred from the conduct of the parties that a new contract between them containing a stipulation by deft. in the terms of the agreement of Sept. 1886, not to seek employment or do work for former customers of pltf's., had been entered into after deft. attained twenty-one, & an injunction ought to be granted to restrain the breach of such stipulation. —BROWN v. HARPER (1893), 68 L. T. 488; 9 T. L. R. 429; 37 Sol. Jo. 495; 3 R. 585.

196. — Infant mortgagor—Fresh covenant on majority.—An infant entitled to a share in real estate, joined in a mtge. thereof, & in three subsequent further charges, the aggregate principal money secured by the four deeds being £500. After the infant came of age, a reconveyance of the mortgaged property was executed to the mtgors., & a fresh mtge. was executed of the same property by the same mtgors. to the same mtgee. for £550. This mtge. did not refer to the previous mtges. The mtgor. who had executed the first-mentioned mtges. when an infant, died the year following the execution of the last mtge. His brother claiming as his heir-at-law or as otherwise entitled to his share of the realty, brought an action to have all the mtges. declared void under Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), alleging that the last mtge. & the covenants therein contained were merely by way of ratification of the previous mtges. & the covenants in them:—Held: the contracts contained in the mtges. executed while the mtgor. was an infant, for repayment of the money lent, & also the assurance by him of the hereditaments in the same mtges., would be void under the Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), but the covenant for repayment in the mtge. executed after he came of age could not, in the circumstances, be regarded as a mere ratification of his contract made during infancy, but was a fresh covenant made after he had come of age, & upon a good consideration, & such mtge. accordingly could not be declared void or non-enforceable as against his representatives or successors in title. —Re FOULKES, FOULKES v. HUGHES (1893), 69 L. T. 183; 3 R. 682.

197. — Fresh charge on majority.—A married woman, during infancy, with her husband's consent executed a mtge. to her solr. of her reversionary interest for a sum expressed to be for her maintenance & for necessaries. After she attained twenty-one, by a supplemental deed expressing her desire of confirming the principal deed, she charged the premises to the mtgee. for a further advance, admitting that all matters incident to the former indenture had been explained to her ratifying & confirming it as if executed by her when of full age. Deft. W., another client of the solr., having made advances, a transfer supplemental to the original mtge. was executed by the married woman & the solr. of his mtge. debt, & the reversionary interest was assigned to W. subject to the subsisting equity of redemption. W. having sued the married woman for his debt, signed judgment by consent. She subsequently assigned the equity of redemption in the premises to S. & with him brought an action against W. & the solr., alleging that the advances made before she attained twenty-one were in fact made to her husband, & that she had acted without independent advice & without impeaching the transaction. —MILLER v. OSTRANDER (1886), 12 Gr. 349.—CAN.

q. — Re-acknowledgment of deed.—M. came of age on Aug. 27, 1857. On July 1 previous, he executed a deed of the premises in question to U., under whom deft. claimed, which was registered on Aug. 26. This deed was re-acknowledged between Aug. 28 & Aug. 30, & the re-acknowledgment registered on Sept. 5, in the same year. On Aug. 28, a judgment was entered up against M. in favour of pltf. on a confession of judgment in assumpsit signed the same day, & pltf. claimed through a sale by the sheriff upon a writ placed in the sheriff's hands on Oct. 5, 1857:—Held: there had been a sufficient re-acknowledgment of the deed by the infant, & the confession of judgment was not per se an act done to avoid the deed. —McCOPPIN v. MCGUIRE (1873), 34 U. C. R. 157.—CAN.

r. — Mere omission to disaffirm.—A conveyance of land by an infant is voidable only, & may be avoided by him after coming of age. Mere omission to disaffirm such a deed is not sufficient evidence to warrant a jury in finding a confirmation. —DOE d. SEELY v. CHARLTON (1881), 21 N. B. R. 119.—CAN.

t. — Silence.—FOLEY v. CANADA PERMANENT LOAN & SAVINGS CO. (1882), 4 O. R. 38.—CAN.

a. — ——The deed of an infant is not void ab initio, but voidable on his attaining his majority. If he wishes to avoid it, he must expressly repudiate his contract within a reasonable time after coming of age; otherwise his silence will be held to amount to an affirmation of it. —MCDONALD v. RESTIGOUCHE SALMON CLUB (1896), 33 N. B. R. 472.—CAN.

J.—VOL. XXVIII.

b. — Admission of existing liability.—To constitute a ratification, after full age, of a debt contracted during infancy, there must be at least an admission of an existing liability. —LOUDEN MANUFACTURING CO. v. MILMINE (1907), 9 O. W. R. 829; 14 O. L. R. 532.—CAN.

c. — Delay.—A delay of seventeen months in commencing an action to rescind a contract should not be treated as a ratification. —PHILLIPS v. SUTHERLAND (1910), 15 W. L. R. 594; 22 Man. L. R. 491.—CAN.

d. — ——Long delay in repudiating a contract by a minor on his attaining majority, when such delay is wholly unaccounted for, is sufficient ground for inferring a ratification of the contract. —BOIDONATH DEY v. RAMKISHORE DEY (1870), 10 B. L. R. 326, n.; 13 W. R. 166.—IND.

g. — Kistbundi given on attaining majority.—Applt. made a claim upon resps. in respect of certain bonds given during their minority by their exor. & guardian. On attaining majority, resps., being desirous of avoiding payment, were advised that they could only do so by instituting a suit to which the exor. must be a party, & in which a settlement of his accounts would be required. Rather than do this they came to terms with applt. in order to obtain time for the payment of the debt by instalments, & a kistbundi was accordingly executed:—Held: resps. could not now, after the death of their guardian, dispute their liability for a debt which they had thus deliberately undertaken to pay. —GOLAUB KOONWURRE BEBEE v. ESHAN CHUNDER CHOWDHOREE (1861), 2 W. R. 47; 8 Moo. Ind. App. 447.—IND.

h. — Repayment of loan—Not for necessities.—If a minor accepts money except for necessities, he cannot be compelled to repay it, & any contract to do so made by him as a minor is void against him, but if, when of full age, he takes it upon himself to repay, there is no reason either in law or equity why his agreement should be deemed unlawful. —NARAIN SINGH v. CHIRANJI LAL (1924), 1 L. R. 46 All. 568.—IND.

k. — Exercise of power of revocation—Execution of marriage settlement.—A father, tenant for life, & his son, quasi tenant in tail in remainder, of a renewable freehold, joined, while the son was under age, in executing a deed, by which the lands were limited to the father for life, remainder to the son absolutely, if he survived the father, but if he died in the father's lifetime, without issue, to the father absolutely. The father subsequently executed a deed, by which he purported to convey his interest to the son, but remained in possession, & afterwards obtained a renewal from the landlord. The father & son afterwards joined in conveying part of the lands comprised in the original settlement, by which the entail was created; & in order to enable them to do so, exercised a power of revocation, which was reserved to them jointly by the deed proper accounts having been furnished, alleging also misrepresentation, & claiming redemption on payment of such part of the advances as were proved to have been made to her & for necessities:—Held: the moneys in question had been advanced to the infant for & expended for necessities, although the original mtge. did not bind the reversionary interest, but was void & not capable of confirmation by the purported confirmation in the supplemental deed executed after her majority, yet the married woman & her husband had by that deed executed after her majority by a new bargain created a charge on the premises in respect of the debt due for necessities, & having acknowledged that the full sum was owing on the securities, obtained the money to pay off the solr. from W., the transferee, redemption could only be ordered against W. without reducing his security by the sum representing the advances made during infancy.—GARDNER v. WAINFUR (1919), 89 L. J. Ch. 98; 120 L. T. 688.

198. "No action shall be maintained"—Application to "set off"—Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (c. 14), s. 5.]—(1) The right of a deft. in an action to set off a debt due from pltf. to him, under 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 13, exists only where the debt sought to be set-off is enforceable by action.

Where deft. sought to set off a debt, arising upon the promise of an infant, such promise not having been ratified in accordance with above sect.:—Held: the replication of infancy to the plea of set-off was a sufficient answer, & pltf. was entitled to recover.

(2) The words in above sect., "No action shall be maintained," extend to cases of set-off; so that a deft. may not set off a promise of an infant supported merely by a parol ratification after full age in an action brought against him by the infant, any more than he might sue the infant upon such promise, both being equally precluded by above sect.—RAWLEY v. RAWLEY (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 460; 45 L. J. Q. B. 675; 35 L. T. 191; 24 W. R. 995, C. A.

199. — Agreement to grant lease.]—Defts., an adult & an infant, agreed to grant a lease of property of which they were joint tenants. The adult was not guilty of misrepresentation or misconduct:—Held: specific performance could not be decreed against both defts., one being an infant, nor executed during the son's minority. The son afterwards executed a settlement upon his marriage, to which the father was no party, by which he conveyed the lands to trustees, upon trusts, for his intended wife, & the issue of the marriage, with remainder, in default of issue, to himself absolutely. The son survived the father, & died, leaving issue female only. The next quasi tenant in tail filed his bill, claiming the benefit of the entail as still subsisting:—Held: the deed executed by the infant was voidable only, & not void, & either the exercise of the power of revocation, or the marriage settlement by the infant, was of itself a sufficient confirmation of that deed.—ALLEN v. ALLEN (1842), 4 I. Eq. R. 472; 2 Dr. & War. 307; 1 Con. & Law. 427.—IR.

l. — Consent judgment.]—Y., in an action tried before a jury, obtained judgment against M., for £65, the price of a horse sold to M. while an infant. M. had pleaded infancy in his defence, but had withdrawn the plea at the trial, & fought the case on the ground that the transaction was one of hiring, not of sale. Y. subsequently issued a debtor's summons against M. for payment of the amount of the judgment & costs. The judge in bkpcy., being of opinion on the evidence before him that the horse was not a necessary, dismissed the debtor's summons:—Held: the Ct. of Bankruptcy had power to go behind the judgment, & inquire into the consideration; & there being evidence before the judge entitling him to find that the horse was not a necessary, he was right in dismissing the debtor's summons.—Re MEAD, [1916] 2 I. m. — Acquiescence in expenditure on land.]—Deft. during his minority became the grantee in fee of lands purchased by his father from the Crown in the name & for the benefit of the deft. Deft. & his father conveyed the lands on Mar. 28, 1855, during deft.'s minority, to one of pltf's. for the sum of £40, & a portion of the land was resold by the purchaser to his co-pltf's. Deft. attained his majority in Oct. 1861, up to which time about £30 had been expended on the land. Subsequently to Oct. 1861, & prior to Mar. 17, 1866, when deft. gave pltf's. notice to quit & deliver up possession of the land in dispute, £456 had been expended in further improving the property. These improvements had been made with the knowledge, consent, & encouragement of deft. An action of ejectment having been brought by deft. against pltf's., & judgment obtained therein, & the present suit having been instituted to restrain further proceedings thereon:—Held: the acts of deft. after his majority did not amount to a confirmation of the conveyance executed by him during his minority, but pltf's. were entitled to an injunction restraining proceedings upon the judgment obtained by deft. in his action of ejectment until he had paid pltf's. the value of the improvements made upon the land by them with deft.'s knowledge, consent, & encouragement after he attained his majority.—*FRANCE v. Pltf. made an affidavit that he was over twenty-one years of age, although he knew he was not & that he could not make a valid or legal mtge. Deft. did not accept the tender; & pltf. afterwards, while still under age, repudiated the contract, on the ground of infancy & so notified deft.:—Held: what deft. contracted for was a document which would give him security on the land, which the mtge. tendered did; pltf. was unable to perform a condition precedent & that was fatal to his claim for rescission based upon the provision of the contract referred to.—*ROBINSON v. c. Enforcement by infant.]—The widow & infant heirs of C. were entitled, subject to a mtge. to E. By agreement between the widow, E., & W., the premises were conveyed to W., upon an oral understanding that he should retain a part of the premises, equal in value to the sum due on E.'s mtge., which he was to assume, & that he should convey the remainder of the land to the widow, for the benefit of herself & children. The conveyance to W. having been made, the widow & infant heirs filed their bill, seeking a specific performance of the agreement to convey the portion agreed on to them:—Held: the specific relief sought could not be decreed, but under the general prayer, & the case stated, plffs. were entitled to some relief; & a demurrer was therefore overruled.—*CLARK v. Upon receipt of the letter pltf. returned & remained on the farm working it with his father, except at certain times when he went to work for wages for himself. It was proved that the father had pointed out the 50 acres which he intended to give his son, & the son entered & erected a house thereon with his father's approval, & occupied it with his family, he having married in 1879:—Held: pltf. was entitled to specific performance of this agreement.—*GARSON v. Pltf. did remain at the home, working without wages, until all the conditions were fulfilled, & faithfully performed his part of the bargain. The land claimed by pltf. was bought by deft. in her own name but for him pursuant to the said agreement, & he was let into possession as owner pursuant to the terms of the agreement:—Held: pltf. was entitled to have the agreement specifically performed by the conveyance of the land to him.—*DOUGLAS v. Pltf. paid an instalment of the purchase-money, & went with his wife to board & lodge with deft., & shared the management of the business, but afterwards, & before his majority, rescinded the agreement:—Held: pltf. might, in an action for money had & received, recover back the instalment paid under the agreement, less the amount expended by deft. in providing board & lodging for pltf. & his wife.—EVERETT v. WILKINS (1874), 29 L. T. 846.

207. — — — — — Enjoyment of goods purchased.]—Pltf., an infant, agreed with deft. to become tenant of a house, & to pay a certain sum for the furniture therein. Pltf. paid deft. part of this sum & occupied the house, & used the furniture during several months:—Held: pltf. was not entitled under Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 1, to recover back the amount paid by him to deft.

Under the contract in question, which was one for his advantage, pltf., an infant, undertook to pay deft. a sum of money. He paid deft. part of this sum, & gave him a promissory note for the balance. The judge satisfied himself that pltf. was an infant at the time when he entered into the contract, & having satisfied himself of this, did, in my opinion, justice according to law. He set aside the contract, & he ordered the promissory note to be cancelled. It is now contended that, in addition to this relief, pltf. was entitled to an order for the re-payment of the sum paid by him to deft. as money paid under a contract declared to be void. No doubt the words of Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), s. 1, are strong & general, but a reasonable construction ought to be put upon them. The construction which has been contended for on behalf of pltf. would involve a violation of natural justice. When an infant has paid for something & has

l. — Rent of premises — Money paid for goods & fixtures.]—If an infant pay money without valuable consideration, he can get it back; & if he pay money for valuable consideration, he may also recover it, but subject to the condition that he can restore the other party to his former position:—Held: pltf., an infant, was not entitled to recover from deft. moneys paid for rent of premises & purchase of goods & fixtures.—STURGEON v. STARR (1911), 17 W. L. R. 402.—CAN.

m. — Excess deposit paid into bank—Bank Act, s. 95.]—The above sect. imposes no restriction upon repayment by the bank of a deposit in excess of $500 made by an infant. The restriction is upon the amount of deposit; & if, as a matter of policy, the legislature requires an infant's account to be kept under $500, & the bank, in ignorance of the fact that the depositor is an infant, receives a sum in excess of $500, it becomes the bank's duty, on learning of his minority, to repay the excess to the infant. The sect. affords no sanction for the argument that, because $1,800 was unlawfully received by the bank from the infant, & paid out on the infant's order, the infant was entitled to demand payment of $1,300, the disability having ceased; & at any rate, the sect. is not applicable, because there is no "law of the Province" which prevents an infant from depositing money in & withdrawing it from the bank, even assuming that the expression "law of the Province" is not to be confined to an express statutory provision:—Held: pltf., suing the bank for part of the money which it had paid out upon his order, should have come to the ct. promptly after his disability ceased; a delay of a year & a half after majority was fatal to his claim; & it was no excuse that consumed or used it, it is contrary to natural justice that he should recover back the money which he has paid. Here the infant pltf. who claimed to recover back the money which he had paid to deft. had had the use of a quantity of furniture for some months. He could not give back this benefit or replace deft. in the position in which he was before the contract. The object of the statute would seem to have been to restore the law for the protection of infants upon which judicial decisions were considered to have imposed qualifications. The legislature never intended in making provisions for this purpose to sanction a cruel injustice. Deft. therefore could not be called upon to repay the money paid to him by pltf., & the decision appealed against is right (COLERIDGE, C.J.).—VALENTINI v. CANALI (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 166; 59 L. J. 208. — Failure of consideration.]—Held: pltf. might recover back in an action for money had & received a sum which while an infant he had paid in advance towards the purchase of a share in deft.'s trade; to be retained by deft. as a forfeiture if pltf. failed to fulfil an agreement to enter into partnership with deft.—*CORPE v. (2) What the Ct. of Equity has done in cases of this kind is to prevent the infant from retaining the benefit of what he has obtained by reason of his fraud. It has done no more than this & this is a very different thing from making him liable to pay damages & compensation for the loss of the other party's bargain. A. Onus of Proof.

215. On plaintiff—To prove goods necessities.]—When to a declaration for goods sold & delivered, neither his parents nor guardian did anything towards his care or support. The test is whether the articles supplied were needed for the use of the infant.—JAGON RAM MARWARI v. MAHADEO PROSAD SAHU (1909), 1 L. R. 36 Cal. 768; 13 C. W. N. 643.—IND.

n. Goods purchased appropriated on account of board.]—An infant trader bought goods from pltf., part of which were given by him to his boarding-house keeper on account of his board:—Held: the fact of the goods being so applied did not render them necessities so as to enable pltf. to recover.—JENKINS v. WAY (1881), 14 N. S. R. (2 R. & G.) 394; 2 C. L. T. 108.—CAN.

deft. [an undergraduate] pleads infancy, & pltf. replies necessities, & it appears in evidence that the goods are prima facie not necessities, it is for pltf. to show special circumstances, causing them to become necessities, in order to entitle him to recover their value.

The facts are that pltf. brings his action, to which deft. pleads infancy, whereupon pltf. replies that the goods are necessities. Now the burden of proof is upon pltf. to show that the things are necessities. The demand is for cakes, desert, ice, figs, etc., & are clearly not necessities for a person who has the necessary meat & drink provided for him. Then the question is, are these articles necessities for him? If they were not, the case falls within that of Brooker v. Scott, No. 246, post, & Wharton v. Mackenzie, Cripps v. Hills, No. 219, post; & as nothing is shown here to prove that there were any particular circumstances to take the case out of the general rule, the rule must be made absolute (COLERIDGE, J.).—SHIELDS v. ROTTON (1848), 11 L. T. O. S. 132.

216. — —.]—An infant, the son of a baronet, & having an income of £500 a year, with the prospect of £20,000 on attaining his majority, bought on credit a pair of solitaires, or shirt sleeve studs, composed of crystals adorned with diamonds & rubies, & a silver goblet for presentation to a friend, at whose house he had been staying. No evidence was given of anything peculiar in deft.'s station rendering it exceptionally necessary for him to have such articles. The jury, in answer to the question put to them, found that the articles were necessities, & suitable to deft.'s station & degree:—Held: as the onus was on pltf., & he gave no evidence to show that the articles were necessities, the question ought not to have been left to the jury.

The question in all such cases is one of mixed law & fact, the preliminary question being, as in all other cases, whether there is any evidence on which the jury could properly find for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. The judge, who must be supposed to know as well as a jury can know without evidence, what is the usual & normal state of things, & whether any particular article is of such a description that it may be a necessary under such usual state of things, must determine, first, whether the case is such as to cast on pltf. the onus of proving that the articles in question are necessities, & then whether there is any sufficient evidence for the jury to satisfy that onus; & if there is not, he ought to direct a nonsuit.—*RYDER v. 219. ———.]—In an action for goods sold & delivered, infancy was pleaded: replication, that the goods were necessities suitable to the estate & condition of deft. It appeared that deft. was residing as an undergraduate at Oxford; & that the goods consisted of articles supplied for dinners at his own rooms, where he received parties of friends, & for fruit, confectionery, etc.:—Held:—(1) in default of explanation, the ct. would treat them as not necessities; (2) in case of explanation respecting any of the articles, as in the case of illness, where fruit, etc., was medically described, the question whether the articles were necessities or not would be a mixed one of law & fact; (3) the rank of fortune of deft. might make some articles "necessaries," which, in the case of another person, must be deemed articles of mere comfort & convenience; but articles which, in the particular case, are matters of comfort & convenience merely, can never be included under the term "necessaries;" (4) articles which might in some situations be necessities might not be so to a deft. in statu pupillari at Oxford, where necessities are, to a certain extent, supplied by the college.

Whether the goods were necessities or not, was entirely a question for the jury; & this was fairly left to them. One matter for their consideration would be the nature of the supply deft. derived from other & authorised sources. . . . C. Station in Life.

See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 2.

233. General rule.]—An infant, a captain in the army, is liable to pay for a livery ordered for his servant as necessities, but not for cookades ordered for the soldiers of his company.

The general rule is clear—that infants are liable for necessities according to their degree & station in life (LORD KENYON, C.J.)—HANDS v. SLANEY (1800), 8 Term Rep. 578; 101 E. R. 1556.

*Annotation:—*Consd. Lowe v. Griffith (1835), 4 L. J. C. P. 94.

234. Real & not apparent station in life.]—(1) Those things are to be deemed necessities, in order to charge an infant, which correspond with his real circumstances, not with his appearance in life.

(2) It is incumbent upon a tradesman before he trusts an infant with what may appear necessities to inquire whether he is provided by his friends.—FORD v. FOTHERGILL (1794), 1 Esp. 211; Peake, 301, N. P.

235. —.]—In an action for necessities supplied to the wife before the date of her marriage, & while she was an infant under the age of twenty-one years:—Held: the true test by which to judge whether the things supplied were necessities was the real position of the husband in society, & not the apparent & assumed condition which he may take upon himself.—STACY v. FIRTH (1867), 16 L. T. 498.

236. Not confined to requisites of subsistence.]—(1) To a declaration for goods sold, etc., deft. pleaded his infancy, to which pltf. replied that the goods were necessities suitable to the degree, estate, & condition of deft.:—Held: the term necessities included such things as were useful & suitable to the state & condition in life of the party, & not merely such as are requisite for bare subsistence.

(2) It is a question for the jury, whether the articles are such as a reasonable person, of the age & station of the infant, would require for real use.

(3) Articles which are purely ornamental, & not useful, are not in any case necessities.—PETERS v. FLEMING (1840), 6 M. & W. 42; 9 L. J. Ex. 81.

237. Relevant circumstances—Quality & quantity of goods supplied.]—(1) If a person of full age orders clothes, however extravagantly & absurdly, & they are delivered to him, he is bound to pay for them; but with a minor it is otherwise. A minor is only liable for necessities suitable to his state & degree, & the jury must consider not only whether the clothes were suitable in point of quality, but also in point of quantity. If a minor has been supplied with ten coats from another tradesman, & immediately after that pltf. supplies him with another, pltf. will not be entitled to be paid for that other coat, as it was unnecessary.

(2) If a minor is supplied with necessities suitable to his estate & degree, no matter from what quarter, a tradesman cannot recover for any further supply made to the minor just after.

In an action for the price of clothes, brought by a tailor against a minor, deft. may go into evidence to show that he had all the clothes which were suitable to his estate & degree from other tailors; & if he in fact had such clothes from them, it makes no difference that he has not paid for them, or even that he has successfully defended an action brought by one of them to recover the price of the clothes supplied by him.—*BURGHART v. 240. Contract under Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 2.]—Where an action is brought for the price of goods sold & delivered & deft. pleads & proves infancy, the onus is on pltf. to prove that the goods were necessities within the meaning of that term as defined in above sect.: that is to say, that the goods were suitable not only to the condition of life of the infant, but also to his actual requirements at the time of sale & delivery.

An infant, like a lunatic, is incapable of making a contract of purchase in the strict sense of the words; but if a man satisfies the needs of the infant or lunatic by supplying to him necessities, the law will imply an obligation to repay him for the services so rendered, & will enforce that obligation against the estate of the infant or lunatic. The consequence is that the basis of the action is hardly contract. Its real foundation is an obligation which the law imposes on the infant to make a fair payment in respect of needs satisfied. In other words the obligation arises re & not consensu. I do not mean that this nicety of legal phraseology has been adhered to. The common & convenient phrase is that an infant is liable for goods sold & delivered provided that they are necessities, & there is no objection to that phraseology so long as its true meaning is understood. But the treatment of such actions by the Cts. of Common Law has been in accordance with that principle I have referred to (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—NASH v. INMAN, [1908] 2 K. B. 1; 77 L. J. K. a. Riding horse—Hunter.]—Pltf. sued deft., an infant, for the price of a hunter worth £150. Deft., an English youth, was on a visit to a country hunting gentleman in Ireland, & at the time of the bargain, he stated that he was a member of the S. Hunt, as such a contract may be considered as made for her personal benefit. Semble: that a child or more distant relation, being an infant, would not be liable upon a contract for the burial of a parent or relative.

Things necessary are those without which the infant cannot reasonably exist. . . . Articles of mere luxury are always excluded, though luxurious necessities are sometimes allowed. This principle alone would not decide this case. An infant is allowed by law to make a contract of marriage. A contract for necessities to an infant's wife or children is used by Lord Bacon as an illustration of the law on this subject. There are many authorities which lay down that Christian burial is a part of a man's own rights. An infant husband could contract for the Christian burial of his wife or children as personæ conjunctæ. Then the question arises whether there is any distinction between an infant husband & an infant widow. If the husband can so contract, it is because the burial of his persona conjuncta is a personal benefit to him. If so, we do not see why a different rule should prevail in the case of the wife. It may be observed, that as the ground of our decision arises out of the previous contract of marriage, it does not follow that other relations would be liable (ALDERSON, B.).—CHAPPLE v. His father was a beneficed clergyman, who paid various sums for him during his minority, & gave him a further sum of £1,500 when he attained the age of twenty-one years:—Held: a stanhope was not necessary for him while a minor as being suitable to his state & degree.—CHARTERS v. Riding horse—For business purposes.]—Indebitatus assumpsit for a horse sold; plea, infancy; replication, that it was sold to carry debt. about on necessary business; demurrer:—Held: the demurrer admits the necessity, & judgment must be for pltf.—BARBER v. b. Bicycle.]—Where an infant owned a bicycle, which he used for periodically travelling a distance of 12 or 14 miles from his work to his home & bought another bicycle giving the first one in part payment:—Held: the bicycle was an article of utility & was a necessary.—SCARBOROUGH v.

PART V. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 3.

310 i. Liability.—In a contract entered into on behalf of a minor by his guardian under which the guardian borrows money, but no charge is created on the minor's estate, no decree can be passed against the minor on his attaining his majority or his estate, except in cases in which the minor's estate would have been liable for the obligation incurred by the guardian under the personal law to which he is subject.—PATCHU RAMAJOGAYYA v. VAJJULA JAGANNADHAN (1919), 1 L. R. 42 Mad. 185.—IND.

318 i. — If expended on necessities.—On Apr. 20, 1886, a sum of money was advanced by A. to a minor, who executed a bond in respect thereof & duly registered the same. The money was required by the minor to provide for his defence in certain criminal proceedings then pending against him on a charge of dacoity, & was used by him for that purpose. On June 18, 1892, A. instituted a suit against the minor for the amount due on the bond. It was urged on behalf of the minor, who had not attained majority at the time the suit was filed, that he was not liable to A. for the amount advanced; that it was not advanced for "necessaries": that he

GRAHAM* (1901), 70 L. J. Ch. 568; 84 L. T. 497.

310. Tobacco.—Cigars & tobacco cannot, under ordinary circumstances, & in the absence of evidence of any special circumstances rendering them necessary medicinally or otherwise, be considered "necessaries" for an infant. In such a case the proper course is for the judge to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury: but where there are such special circumstances it is a mixed question of law & fact, & must be left to the jury with proper directions.—*BRYANT v. 319. — ——Liability of estate.—One borrows money during his infancy, & applies it to the buying of necessities, & afterwards coming to age, was not liable under the bond:—Held: the liberty of the minor being at stake, the money advanced must be taken to have been borrowed for necessities; in such a case the bond being the basis of the suit, could not be ignored & treated as non-existent, & on its being proved to have been executed by the minor in respect of money advanced for necessities, pltf. was entitled to a decree.—*SHAM CHARAN MAL v. An infant is not necessarily liable on a contract merely because it is for his benefit. I am satisfied . . . that the only contracts which, if for the infant's benefit, are enforceable against him, are contracts relating to the infant's person, such as contracts for necessities, food, clothing & lodging, contracts of marriage, & contracts of apprenticeship & service. On the preliminary examination it appeared that both the debtors were infants. There was no evidence that any of the debts were for necessities, or that the infants had expressly held themselves out as adults. The Official Receiver applied that the adjudication should be annulled, but the registrar refused to make an order. The Official Receiver appealed to the Div. Ct.:—Held: in the case of an infant trader there could be no valid debt on which a receiving order could be made; it made no difference that the debtors had presented their own petition, & the order of the registrar should be reversed, & the adjudication annulled.—*Re L. SECT. 9.—JOINT CONTRACTS OF INFANT AND ADULT.

349. Voidable as to infant—Validity as to adult—How tested.]—An infant & one of full age A. join in a bond to perform an award & it is awarded that they or either of them shall pay £10 & that pltf. shall release to them after they have released to him. The bond is valid as to A. although voidable as to the infant, & the award good & mutual, although the infant cannot make a good release. If an infant & man of full age seal an obligation, it is voidable as to the infant & valid as to the other. An award that one of the parties & a stranger shall do an act, is binding on the party, & void as to the stranger.—GILL v. RUSSELL (1673), FREEM. K. B. 62, 139; 89 E. R. 48, 101.

350. — — Several covenants — Grant of annuity.]—The several covenant of one grantor of an annuity is not avoided by the infancy who grants in the same deed.

Suppose a young man left with £10,000 per annum, which is directed to accumulate until he is of age, & if a guardian for the necessary subsistence of the young man & his education agrees to raise money by this mode of annuity & the guardian joins therein for security it would be very hard if this security could be vacated (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—*HAW v. 352. — — Acceptance of bill by partners.]—If one of two partners is an infant, the holder of a bill accepted by both partners may declare on it as accepted by the adult only in the names of both; & if deft. pleads in abatement that the other partner ought also to be sued, pltf. may reply his infancy, & it is no departure.

There is a binding contract as to the adult though void as to the infant (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—BURGESS v. MERRILL (1812), 4 Taunt. 468; 128 E. R. 410.

353. — — Promissory note by father & son.]—Pltf. sued defts., father & son, on a promissory note given in respect of a loan to the son, who was under age when the money was advanced to him. The father joined in the note in order to facilitate the transaction, understanding that the debt would be paid when the son came of age. It appeared that in all probability pltf. knew that the son was under age:—Held: the true meaning of the transaction was that the father acted as principal borrower, & therefore, although by the Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62), the son was not liable, the father was liable as principal.—WAUTHIER v. WILSON (1912), 28 T. L. R. 239, C. A.

354. — — Enforcement against adult—Whether infant must be joined—Discontinuance against infant.]—Where pltf. declares on a joint contract, & one deft. pleads infancy, pltf. cannot enter a nolle prosequi & proceed against the other deft. in that action, but should commence a new action against the adult deft. only.—*CHANDLER v. Pltf., in answer to the latter plea, admitted on the record that he could not deny the infancy; & he entered a nolle prosequi as to deft. pleading it, but went to trial against the other:—Held: he could not recover against this last, his admission on the record being conclusive evidence that there was no joint promise. The law is the same as to infants: they are liable for their torts, but not (with certain exceptions) on their contracts. There is a class of intermediate cases, partaking partly of the nature of contracts & partly of the nature of torts, in which the question arises to which category they are to be referred.

PART VI. SECT. 1.

360 i. 360 iii. ———.] — Unless for necessities, the contract of an infant is not binding on him, nor is he liable for a fraudulent representation that he is of full age whereby the pltf. is induced to contract with him; & he is entitled to plead infancy in order to escape from

360 iv. ———.] — Pltf., when an infant, conveyed land to deft. L., & made an acknowledgment representing herself to be of full age, L. did not know that pltf. was an infant. certain conditions, averring that deft. at the time of making the representation was an infant, as he himself well knew, & that he refused to repay the loan or comply with the conditions, to the damage of pltf. The ct. granted leave to deft., under C. L. P. Act, 1852 (c. 76), s. 80, to demur to this declaration, & plead not guilty, with a traverse that pltf. confided in the alleged fraudulent representation: on an affidavit of deft.'s attorney, that he was informed & believed that deft. had just cause to plead those pleas, & that the declaration would be held bad in substance on demurrer, & that the objections raised to it by demurrer were good & valid objections in law. Semble: the action would not lie.—PRICE v. SECT. 2.—LIABILITY IN EQUITY.SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

367. No advantage from own fraud.]—I must also deny what has been advanced in the argument of the present case, that either by the law of England, or any other law, every contract made by an infant is void.

By our law some agreements bind absolutely, some are void, some are voidable. Contracts for necessities, such as diet, education, etc., are good, & the infant's body liable to be taken in execution for them. So of a sum advanced for taking an infant out of gaol. Infancy never authorises fraud; as, if goods were delivered to an infant, & he embezzle them, trover would lie against him; or if he took an estate, & was to pay rent for it, he should not hold the estate, & defend himself against payment of the rent, by pretence of infancy. If an infant pays money with his own hand, without a valuable consideration for it, he cannot get it back again. If he receives rents, he cannot demand them again when of age.

Better terms may be obtained for infants by parents & guardians than when they are of full age; by much the greatest number of women are married when under age; but they are not thereby to be made an instrument to defraud others, for there is no difference in effect whether the fraud be premeditated, or the circumstances by subsequent events be turned into fraud. If the statute of Hen. 8 had never been made, cts. of equity would have given relief; but I am clearly of opinion that infants are barred under that statute. That act was made for uses, not for jointures: this is a provision arising out of the general consequences of uses (LORD MANSFIELD).

An infant so near of age, wanting only two months, might bind herself as to personal rights. She was capable of devising away all her own personal estate. This is not so strong. It is not to deprive her of her own, but to exclude her of the contingency of any part of her husband's personal estate (LORD HARDWICKE).—BUCKINGHAMSHIRE (EARL) v. 368. —.]—(1) A man cannot be charged in equity, after his majority, on a purchase or sale, or contract, made during his minority, on the mere ground, that, without any false assertion by the infant, the other party believed he was not a minor, & dealt with him on the supposition that only adults could enter into such transactions. The ct., therefore, refused to entertain a bill for an injunction to restrain an action brought to recover certain railway shares which had been sold & assigned, by deed, to pltf. in equity, by pltf. at law, during the infancy of pltf. at law, there being no evidence against pltf. at law of misrepresentation as to his infancy.

(2) Unquestionably it is the law of England, that an infant, however generally for his own sake protected by an incapacity to bind himself by contracts, may be doli capax in a civil sense, & for civil purposes, in the view of a ct. of equity, though perhaps only when pubertati proximus or older, & not, I suppose, at so early an age as in a criminal sense, & for criminal purposes, & may therefore commit a fraud for which, or the consequences of which, he may after his majority be made civilly answerable in equity. I am not now speaking of cases in which infants, if liable at all, are liable at law only, or in which adults, if suable in respect of acts done during infancy, are suable at law only. But as far as equity is concerned, the practical application of the rule or doctrine to which I have been just referring must not seldom, I conceive, be matter of much delicacy & difficulty. I agree with a learned author, who says, that in what cases in particular a ct. of equity will thus exert itself it is not easy to determine (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-O.).

(3) Pltfs. seem substantially to contend for not less than this general proposition, that if a minor deals in a matter of contract with a person, who, having no notice of the minority, does, without any representation to him on the subject, believe the minor to be of full age, the minor is, after his majority at least, answerable in equity to that person for the contract or the consequences, or liable in equity to be compelled to restore him to

—In a ct. of equity an infant stands in no different position from a person of full age in relation to matters of fraud, & therefore if he makes a representation upon which another his original position. Not referring, as I do not refer, to a case of necessities, or any case where the law permits an infant to contract, or any case where the point is purely & merely legal, I am not aware that such a proposition is founded in principle, or supported by authority that binds the ct. It seems to me full of danger & evil—as was said at law in a case already mentioned, where it was held that an action of deceit would not lie upon an assertion by a minor that he was of full age (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—STIKEMAN v. DAWSON (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 90; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 585; 16 L. J. Ch. 205; 8 L. T. O. S. 551; 11 Jur. 214; 63 E. R. 984.

373. —.]—If persons choose to supply goods to an infant on credit, they take the chance of being paid. Such is the law, & I am not prepared to say that there is any absurdity or hardship in it, or that it ought to be altered. That is not my province. It is said, however, that a different rule prevails in equity, & that when an infant has committed a fraud by representing that he is not an infant in order to obtain possession of goods he can be made liable in equity for the misrepresentation. In such cases the ct. has taken into consideration the appearance of the infant for that is a very material matter. If the representation were made by a boy of ten years old, it would be impossible that the person to whom it was made could have relied on it. But if a man who is apparently of full age represents that he is of full age, the person to whom he makes the representation may well be deceived by it. An infant is capable of committing a fraud in equity just as he is capable of committing a crime, & may be made liable for it (JESSEL, M.R.).

An infant does not by filing a liquidation petition acquire full age. . . . He cannot . . . either obtain advantages or entail on himself the disadvantages of such a proceeding. By adopting a proceeding which would only be valid if he was an adult he does not make himself an adult; he cannot in that way alter his status of infancy (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re JONES, Ex p. JONES (1881), 18 Ch. J.—VOL. XXVIII.

375 i. Charge given during infancy—Subsequent charge—Knowledge of mortgagee.]—A married woman under twenty-one but representing herself to be of full age, conveyed land to a bona fide purchaser for value, & the conveyance was duly registered. After attaining majority, the married woman & her husband joined in a voluntary deed to another person as trustee for her, & he subsequently sold the land, & his vendee, on the same day, gave a mtge. thereon:—Held: the married woman, notwithstanding her nonage, was bound by her representations as to her being of age; & the other parties having acquired their interests with full knowledge of the existence of the deed by her to the purchaser, & after the registration thereof, took subject to all the rights of the purchaser.—BENNETTO v. HOLDEN (1874), 21 Gr. 222.—CAN.

PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 2.

376 i. Whether ordered against infant—Money lent.]—Where a minor has obtained money by misrepresenting his age, that amounts to fraud & he may be made to refund it, but in the absence of fraud a refund cannot be ordered.—VAIKUNTARAMA PILLAI v. AUTHIMOOLAMCHETTIAR (1914), I. L. R. 38 Mad. 1071.—IND.

376 ii. —.]—Whether or not the doctrine of estoppel applies to a contract entered into by a minor, where persons who are in fact under age by false & fraudulent misrepresentations as to their age induce others to purchase property from them, they are liable in equity to make restitution to the purchasers for the benefit they have obtained before they can recover possession of the property sold.—JAGAR NATH SINGH v. SUB-SECT. 3.—MISREPRESENTATION TO TRUSTEES AND EXECUTORS.

378. Payment of funds by trustees — Whether infant entitled to repayment.]—A married infant, by the solicitation of himself & his brother, an attorney, obtained a transfer of stock from trustees, a few months before he came of age, & after coming of age, received a transfer of the residue of the stock to which he was entitled; & then assigned all his property to two creditors, who had struck a docket against him, they agreeing not to prosecute the docket:—Held: to be a fraud in the infant; he recognised the payment when of age, & therefore, & because the agreement was contrary to the spirit of the bkpt. laws, such assignees were not entitled to call for a repayment of the money paid during the infancy.

Though in general a payment to an infant may be bad, yet if the infant practices a fraud, he is liable for the consequences. . . . The concealment of his infancy, under such circumstances, certainly was a fraud & precludes him or his assigns, who stand precisely in his situation from calling for a repayment (PLUMER, V.-O.).—CORY v. GERTCKEN (1816), 2 Madd. 40; 56 E. R. 250.

380. — Release to executor.] — (1) Where a person represents to another that he is of age, & executes to him a release, upon which the latter acts:—Held: he could not afterwards impeach the validity of the release on the ground of his minority; & it was immaterial whether he was aware or not of the incorrectness of the representation.

(2) Where the answer of an extrix. alleged a release to have been executed by pltf., a legatee, & that he had then stated that he was of age, but contained admissions from which his minority at the time might be inferred:—Held: such admissions did not entitle pltf. to an inquiry whether he was a minor at the date of the transaction.—WRIGHT v. SNOWE (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 321; 64 E. R. 144.

386. — — —.]—Where the substantial ground of action is contract, pltf's. cannot, by declaring in tort, render a person liable who would not have been liable on his promise. Therefore, where pltf. declared that, having agreed to exchange mares with deft., deft., by falsely warranting his mare to be sound, well knowing her to be unsound, falsely & fraudulently deceived pltf., etc.:—Held: infancy was a good plea in bar.—GREEN v. GREEN-BANK (1816), 2 Marsh. 485.

387. — Damage to hired horse.]—Pltf. cannot convert an action founded on a contract into a tort so as to charge an infant deft.; therefore where pltf. declared that at deft.'s request he had delivered a mare to deft. to be moderately ridden & that deft. maliciously intending, etc., wrongfully & injuriously rode the mare so that she was damaged, etc.:—Held: deft. might plead his infancy in bar, the action being founded on a contract.—JENNINGS v. PART VII. SECT. 1.

k. Liability of parent.]—The doctrine of the liability of a master for his servant's negligence applies in the case of the implied relationship of master & servant sometimes existing between parent & child, but as in the case of master & servant so in that of parent & child there is no liability if at the time the negligent act is committed the child is engaged in his own affairs

l. —.]—A father is not liable for negligence in allowing his fourteen year old son to go out alone with a gun to shoot game, if the boy has been carefully trained in the use of a gun & ordinarily exercises great care in handling it; but the son will be liable in damages for the consequences of carelessness in firing the gun so as to start a prairie fire which destroys pltf.'s property.—TURNER v. SNIDER (1906), 16 Man. L. R. 79.—CAN.

m. —.]—Apart from the principles of the law of agency, a parent is not responsible in the absence of negligence on his own part, for the negligence of his child.—KENEALY v. KARAKA (1906), 26 N. Z. L. R. 1118.—N.Z.

388. J.—An infant, a Cambridge undergraduate, hired a mare for a ride along the road, being expressly told that she was not fit for leaping. The mare was put to a fence, & in taking it fell upon a stake & was so injured that she died:—Held: the infant was guilty of an actionable wrong, & therefore liable irrespective of the question of necessities.

(2) The nature & extent of the liability of an infant or a married woman cannot be changed by suing ex delicto in respect of a claim arising on a contract.—BURNARD v. HAGGIS (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 45; 2 New Rep. 126; 32 L. J. C. P. 189; 8 L. T. 320; 9 Jur. N. S. 1325; 11 W. R. 644; 143 E. R. 360.

389. J.—In an action to recover damages for injuries to a mare of pltf., whilst let on hire to deft., the statement of claim alleged that deft. hired from pltf. a mare & dogcart, to go from M. to C. & back, on the express conditions that only one other person besides deft. should be carried on any part of the journey in the dogcart, & that the mare should be driven from M. to C. & back, & nowhere else; that in violation of the conditions deft. carried on his return journey three other persons besides himself in the dogcart, & also drove the mare a greater distance than from M. to C. & back, viz. to B., four miles beyond C., & back to M.; & deft. also, instead of using due care & diligence in driving the mare at a reasonable pace, as it was his duty to do, drove her furiously, carelessly, & negligently, & beat & otherwise ill-treated her, that the mare on her return was found to be badly cut, bruised, & injured, & was suffering greatly, owing to having been overdriven, & that her injuries, by reason of the negligence, misuser, & improper conduct of deft. were so great, that pltf. was obliged to have her destroyed. In his statement of defence, deft. did not admit pltf.'s statement of claim, or his claim or any part of it, & he denied the want of due care, etc., in driving, or that he drove furiously, etc., or beat or otherwise ill-treated the mare, or that any injury was done to her by reason of any negligence on his part; & he said that at the time of the supposed contract & letting to hire he was, & still is, an infant under twenty-one years; & it was contended on the part of deft. that, being an infant, he was not liable in the present action. The facts as set forth in the statement of claim were proved at the trial, & a liability on the ground of culpable negligence on the part of a parent in putting into the hands of his son & pupil a loaded gun which might do mischief though none such was intended.—DAVIE v. WILSON (1854), 16 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 956.—SCOT.

o. — J.—In an action of damages for injury alleged to have been caused to a foot-passenger by a horse ridden by a boy of fourteen, against the boy & his father, the pursuer averred that the horse was powerful & spirited, that the father, who was owner of the horse, carelessly or culpably authorised or allowed the boy to take out the horse, which he had neither the requisite strength nor experience to manage, & that he had on a former occasion been unable to manage it, & that this was known to the father:—Held: the pursuer was entitled to an issue against both defenders.—BROWN v. FULTON (1881), 9 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 36.—SCOT.

p. — J.—Parents are not personally answerable in damages for the torts of their children.—JANUARY v. KILPATRICK (1881), 2 E. D. C. 18.—S. AF.

q. — J.—A father is not liable for the tortious act of his minor son where such act is not committed in the execution of the father's work or verdict was found for pltf. for $25, & on a rule to set that verdict aside, & for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence did not establish deft.'s liability:—Held: it was clear from the statement of claim, the whole of which must be looked at in order to see whether the case was substantially in contract or in tort, that pltf. claimed damages for a tort; & in addition to breaking the contract, deft., by driving the mare at an excessive speed, & unduly flogging, & otherwise ill-treating, & negligently, & carelessly using her, committed a separate & independent wrong beyond & apart from the contract, & was liable for that wrong in the present action, to which, being in tort, the plea of infancy afforded no defence.—WALLEY v. HOLT (1876), 35 L. T. 631; 41 J. P. 56.

390. — — Acknowledgment of debt—Misappropriation of money.—B., a journeyman butcher, an infant, received money from customers of D. his master, & did not account for the sums received. On Oct. 27, 1888, D. accused B. of this misconduct, & B. admitted the fact, & it was also proved by some of the customers. In Nov. 1888 D.'s wife made out an account of money so received & not accounted for, namely, £74 19s. 1½d. On Dec. 27, 1888, B. came of age, & became entitled to a sum of £426 under a will. B. then signed a memorandum in which he acknowledged that he owed D. £77 1s. 7½d., being the amount above stated & £2 2s. 6d. costs, & promised to pay the sum within a week; he also charged the sum due to him under the will, & authorised the trustees to pay the sum of money owing to D. On summons by D. for payment:—Held: (1) this was no ratification of a contract made during infancy, & Infants Relief Act, 1874 (c. 62) did not apply, to the case; (2) the boy was liable to an action of tort; & he gave the charge to avoid being sued in tort, therefore there was good consideration, & the summons must be allowed with costs.—Re SEAGER, SEELEY v. BRIGGS (1889), 60 L. T. 665.

The infant, after arriving at his destination, drove a friend twelve miles farther on, in the course of which additional journey the car was damaged without any negligence on the part of the infant. In an action against the infant for damages for the wrongful use of the car:—Held: nothing done by the infant rendered him liable as an independent tort-feasor.

(2) Although the hiring of the car for the purpose in question by an infant in the position of deft. might be a necessary, it would not be so if an onerous term, such as that the car should be at the infant's risk, formed part of the contract of hiring.—FAWCETT v. SMETHURST (1914), 84 L. J.

394. Liability of parent—Savage dog kept by daughter—Knowledge of vicious character.]—A father allowed his daughter, aged seventeen, who resided with him, to keep in his house a dog which he knew to be savage. The dog was her property, & she paid for its food & licence out of her earnings. While so kept there it attacked & killed a valuable dog belonging to a third person:—Held: as the daughter was of a sufficient age to allow of her exercising control over her dog, her father was not responsible for the damage done.—NORTH v. WOOD [1914] 1 K. B. 629; 83 L. J. K. B. 587; 110 L. T. 703; 30 T. L. R. 258, D. C.

395. — Damage by infant's user of air gun—Previous warning by parent.]—Deft. gave a present of an air gun to his son who was about fifteen years old, & his son when shooting at a mill broke a window. Deft. in consequence of a complaint from the miller promised to smash the air gun but did not do so. Afterwards deft.'s son, when playing with pltf., another boy, shot him in the eye. In an action by pltf. against deft. for negligence in allowing the boy to have the gun the judge held that after the warning received by deft. it was negligence to allow the boy to use the gun, & he awarded pltf. damages:—Held: there was evidence to justify the judge's conclusion.—BEBEE v. 418. — Settled land—Infant remainderman.]—Testator devised his real estate to the use of three persons successively for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainders over. The last tenant for life was an infant. He also bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trusts corresponding with the limitations of his real estate. At testator's death the mansion-house was very dilapidated; structural alterations & repairs were alleged to be absolutely necessary to make the house habitable for the present tenant for life, who proposed to occupy it. The trustees, with the consent of all the tenants for life, applied for leave to expend part of the residuary personal estate in carrying out repairs, necessary for the preservation of the house, on the ground that it would be for the benefit of all persons interested in the estate:—Held: there was no jurisdiction to charge the interest of the infant tenant for life in remainder with the expenditure proposed.—*Re DE TEISSIER'S SETTLED ESTATES, Re DE TEISSIER'S TRUSTS, DE TEISSIER v. 419. — Consent of remainderman.]—Whatever original jurisdiction the ct. possessed to sanction the expenditure by trustees of an infant's money on his property for purposes other than those authorised by the Settled Land Acts for the application of capital money still remains, & has not been impliedly taken away by the Settled Land Acts, though the provisions of the Acts are of great use as a guide to the ct. in the exercise of such jurisdiction.

Semle: under the original jurisdiction the ct. may, on behalf of an infant actually entitled as tenant in tail, with the concurrence of the next remainderman, authorise trustees in a proper case on the principle of salvage to expend capital money on repairs to buildings which are necessary to enable the property to remain let.—Re HAWKER'S SETTLED ESTATES (1897), 66 L. 422. Power to order sale—Directions in will.]—W. by his will directed his real estate to be sold after his wife's death, & the money arising therefrom, to be equally divided between U. & five other persons; the bill was brought by the widow for a sale; U. was an infant & as heir-at-law to testator had the legal interest in the estates. Though the usual practice was for the parol to demur till the infant came of age, yet it being for his interest that it should be sold, & as in this case there was a trust to be performed, & the ct. could see to a proper application of the money, the judge decreed a sale, but declared at the same time he did not mean by this direction to break in upon the rule of the parol demurring.—*UVEDALE v. The will further provided that the division should not take place until the youngest child attained the age of twenty-one years. An application being made when the youngest child was only seven years old, for sale of a portion of the land in order to pay off a mtge. on the whole:—Held: an order for sale would be against the provisions of the will & therefore in violation of C. S. U. C. c. 12, s. 51.—Re SMITH (1875), 6 P. R. 282.—CAN.

422 iii. —.]—An application by an infant to sell property, on the ground that it was depreciating in value, owing to the extension of the city in a different direction, was refused as a sale might prevent the devise over of the land in specie, & would therefore be against the provisions of the will, by which the property was devised.—Re WILSON (1877), 7 P. R. 244.—CAN.

A trader who had freehold, copyhold, & personal estate, died in Sept. 1832, leaving an infant heir. His estate was insufficient to pay his debts & charges. His partners, however, by deed, took upon themselves to pay all the debts, & secured the principal part of his property for his family. A suit was instituted for carrying the deed into execution, & the master found that it would be for the benefit of the infant heir, that the real estate should be sold & applied in the manner mentioned in the deed. A decree was made for sale, & the infant was declared a trustee within 1 Will. 4, c. 60:—Held: a sale under the decree could not be enforced; the ct. had no jurisdiction to order the sale; the infant was not a trustee within the Act.—*CALVERT v. 423 iv. ———.]—In directing the sale of infants' real estate the ct. is not governed by the consideration of what is most for their present comfort, but what is for their ultimate benefit. The ct. will order a sale of a portion of an infant's estate to save the rest, for the benefit of the infant.—Re McDONALD (1860), 1 Ch. Ch. 97.—CAN.

423 v. ———.]—The lessee of land, with the right to purchase, devised the same to his son, if it could be paid for, & if it could not, that one-half should be sold, & the purchase-money paid for the other half, which he gave to his son, an infant; the exor. advanced out of his own moneys sufficient to pay the price of the land, & the lessors conveyed to the devisee. The personal estate of testator, being small, was exhausted in the payment of debts & funeral expenses, so that the exor. had no means of reimbursing himself, whereupon he filed a bill in this ct. praying a sale of the real estate, & payment of his advances. The ct., in the circumstances, directed a sale to be made of that portion of the lot which testator desired should be sold, if it should appear upon inquiry before the master that the payment to the lessors was for the benefit of the infant.—*LANNIN v. On a bill filed to enforce this agreement, it appeared that other children of the mtgor., who were infants, were interested in the estate. The ct. refused the relief prayed, but directed a reference to the master to inquire if it would be more for the advantage of the infants to adopt the agreement, or that a sale of the estate should be made under the decree of the ct.—*McDOUGALL v. 427 ———.]—An action was brought by the infant heir-at-law, by a next friend, of an intestate against the widow, who was the administratrix, claiming accounts of the personal estate, & of the rents & profits of the real estate received by deft. The action came on for hearing on motion for judgment, & the ct. was asked under above rule to make an order for the sale of the real estate. Deft. did not object:—Held: this was not "a cause or matter relating to real estate" within the meaning of the rule, & the ct. could not order a sale under that rule.—Re STAINES, STAINES v. STAINES (1886), 33 Ch. D. 172; 55 L. J. Ch. 913; 35 W. R. 75.

428. Conduct of sale—To whom given.]—Where a sale has been decreed in one of two concurrent suits, the fact of the party to whom has been given the conduct of the cause being an entire stranger to the family & to the property, is a sufficient reason for taking away from him the conduct of the sale, & giving it to the trustee & testamentary guardian of the infants.—Re GARMESON'S ESTATE, expressed consideration of $200, & there was a receipt for the money indorsed thereon & signed in the same way. The deed was dated Oct. 11, 1880, & there was no other evidence of the time of its execution. The money was not paid into ct. until Sept. 23, 1881, & on Aug. 30, 1881, P. had resold the land for $546 to H., who appeared to have paid the money into ct.:—Held: in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the deed must be assumed to have been executed on the day it bore date; the deed of conveyance to P. was invalid, because it was executed without authority from the ct., & the order afterwards made did not provide for a conveyance already executed, & by its terms the payment of the money into ct. was a condition precedent to the exercising of the power to convey, & Half-Breed Lands Act, c. 67, ss. 10, 11, 12, did not cure these defects. Sect. 11 presupposes the existence of some order, fiat or decree authorising the sale. Its object is to cure defects, irregularities, & omissions in connection with the doing of something authorised by the ct. to be done, not to validate proceedings wholly unauthorised.—*HARDY v. b. —.]—In proceedings under 12 Vict. c. 72, the mother was appointed guardian, & the sale of the greater part of the real estate of the infants was ordered, which was accordingly effected, the proceeds being applied in payment of the debts of the estate, but no investment of the surplus was made, although that course was directed by the order; the whole of such proceeds, together with $5,321 in addition, were expended in support & education of the infants. The guardian thereupon applied for an order to sell the remainder of the real estate. The ct. refused the application, notwithstanding that the master reported the amount claimed was a proper sum to be allowed.—Re HUNTER (1868), 14 Gr. 680.—CAN.

c. —.]—Infant children of an intestate obtained an administration order against their mother, the administratrix, & the master found as proper to be allowed for their maintenance a sum to meet which the personal estate was inadequate, & on further directions a sale was asked of the realty to satisfy the sum so allowed. The ct. refused to sanction such a sale, being satisfied that the suit had been instituted for that purpose merely.

The mtgee. filed a bill for foreclosure against the trustees of the settlement & the adult cestuis que trust only, as defts. One of the latter died after the filing of the bill. The ct. upon a motion for a decree for sale, made the decree in the absence of the infant cestuis que trust, & of the representative of deceased deft., upon an affidavit by the trustee of the settlement, that it would be for the benefit of the infants; & ordered the proceeds to be paid into ct.—*SIFFKEN v. No valid settlement of a female infant's real estate can be made upon her marriage by virtue of any agreement by her, or

n. Arrears of interest.—A mtge. had been created by a married woman upon her estate. After her death a suit was brought against her husband & her children; & the ct., in directing a sale of the mtged. property, refused to make the estate of the children liable to arrears of interest for more than six years; but directed payment to the mtgee., out of any excess after payment of principal money, costs, & six years' interest, of so much of his balance as would represent the husband's interest as tenant by the curtesy in such balance.—TAYLOR v. HARGRAVE (1872), 19 Gr. 271.—CAN.

o. Immediate sale—No time to redeem allowed.—Although by the general rule & course of proceeding in mtge. cases the mtgor. is entitled to her parents or guardians, or by the authority of this Ct.

That the infant could not contract is plain. Could the parents or guardians contract for her? The fee of an infant's real estate does not vest in the guardian, & during the minority of the infant, the guardian holds only as a trustee. Even if authority, therefore, were wanting on the point, it would be difficult to hold that any contract by the guardian could bind the real estate of the infant. It is, however, well settled by the authorities that the parents or guardians have no power to bind the real estate of their infant wards by settlements made upon their marriage (TURNER, L.J.).

(2) Upon the marriage of two infants, one being a ward of ct., the ct. has no power to compel a settlement to be made by either of them during minority, even of the infant ward's personal estate.

The jurisdiction of this ct. in the guardianship of infants has, or at least is supposed to have had its foundation in the rights which the Crown possesses as parens patriæ (TURNER, L.J.).—*FIELD v. There was also a provision that the shares to go to three of the children (one being H.) were to be dealt with according to the discretion of the exors. The son H. was advanced to the extent of $4,000 in his & his father's lifetime, & it was agreed between them that these advances were to be deducted from H.'s share of the father's estate. The other children also received advances on the same terms. The will was dated in 1887; testator died in Apr. 1897; H. died in Aug. 1898, leaving one child, born in Nov. 1897; & the widow of testator died in 1908:—Held: the payment out of ct. of the infant's share, $30,000, to his mother & surrogate guardian, though she was of ample means, should not be sanctioned.—Re CARTER (1909), 20 O. In 1840 J. who was tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, & was supposed to be of full age, agreed with his father, T. for a re-settlement, under which J. was to become tenant for life, with remainder to his first & other sons successively in tail male, with remainders over in favour of T.'s other children & with ultimate remainder to T. in fee, in consideration of T.'s bringing into the new settlement lands of which he was owner in fee, & deeds were executed accordingly. J. discovered in 1850 for the first time that he was in fact under age at the date of the re-settlement, which he thereupon repudiated, & in 1852 T. made a new settlement for value of his own lands:—Held: by J.'s repudiation the re-settlement of the lands in 1840 was rendered void ab initio & the consideration for the settlement then made by T. having thus failed, T.'s lands were thereby wholly liberated from the re-settlement of 1840 so as to enable him to give a good title to the grantees of 1852.—*PAGET v. 458. — Insufficiency of consideration — Purchase price of land.]—C., who was possessed of real property held by gavelkind tenure, died in Aug. 1892, leaving his widow & three sons, his co-heirs in gavelkind. In Nov. 1893, the widow & eldest son, as beneficial owners, conveyed their interest in the property to M. by deed, reciting an agreement for sale for £750, that the two other sons were infants & would convey their shares by customary feoffment on attaining fifteen, & that, of the purchase-money £375 had been apportioned to the widow & £125 to the eldest son, in consideration of which sums the conveyance was expressed to be made. In Dec. 1893, the younger sons, having attained fifteen, assured their shares by feoffment in consideration of £125 to each. M. having agreed to sell the property, the purchaser refused to accept the vendor's title, on the ground that the widow had received too much of the consideration money, & the consent of the infants to her receiving it was not binding, they being under age & able to withdraw their consent on attaining majority:—Held: the purchaser's objection was a valid one.—Re MASKELL & GOLD-FINCH'S CONTRACT, [1895] 2 Ch. 525; 64 L. 496. ———.] — The settled estates of the Duke of Shrewsbury were, by an Act passed in 1719, settled upon the Earl of Shrewsbury, with a proviso against alienation. Two Acts were subsequently passed, one in 1803, & the other in 1843, by which portions of the settled estates, described in the schedules, were vested in trustees, upon trust to sell, & invest the purchase money in the purchase of other estates to be settled upon the same trusts. Some of the lands described in the schedules did not form part of the settled estates when the Act of 1719 was passed. In 1856 the then Earl of Shrewsbury devised all his estates over which he had a power of disposition to pltfs., who filed this bill to obtain possession of the lands which though not forming part of the settled estates in 1719 were included in the schedules to the Acts of 1803 & 1843:—Held:

the alleged settlement of Nov. 1880, pltf. & his father could not be said to have been on equal terms, & the document in question was not binding upon the former; it was clearly the duty of his father, before making any settlement with him, to give him the fullest possible information regarding the estate & his dealings with it, even if then, under the circumstances, a settlement binding on pltf. could have

SUB-SECT. 2.—BY PARENT.

499. Entry into possession by parent—As trustee—Claim to possession by curtesy barred.]—A husband survived his wife, who was one of several equitable tenants in common. He was advised by counsel that he had no title as tenant by the curtesy, his wife never having been in possession, & that if he intended to set up such a title, he ought not to sue with his infant daughter in a partition suit which was then in contemplation. The suit was nevertheless instituted by him as the next friend of the daughter, & in 1830 a decree was obtained. A partition was made under the decree, & the legal estate in the daughter's share conveyed to the use of the father during the infancy of the daughter, in trust for her maintenance, & afterwards for her own use in fee. The daughter attained twenty-one in 1843, & married in 1847. In 1852 the father filed a bill to be relieved from the trusts, on the ground of mistake, & to have his title as tenant by the curtesy established:—Held: (1) length of time & acquiescence, & the marriage of the daughter, although without the father's consent, before the father disputed the daughter's title, constituted a sufficient answer to the suit; (2) possession obtained in the character of trustee could not be retained as one adverse to the cestui que trust, after the legal estate under which the possession was taken had determined; (3) the fact of the marriage having taken place on the faith of the daughter's interest being free from any estate by the curtesy, was sufficiently put in issue by statements in the answer to the effect that up to the marriage the father always told the daughter that the moneys which he paid her were the balance of

been made; pltf. was entitled to the account asked, & as regarded the increase or profits in the dealings with the capital of the estate, these should be apportioned in accordance with the amount of such capital owned respectively by testator & deft. W., & the latter should be allowed a liberal remuneration for his exertions, care, time, & trouble in the management of the estate, which appeared to have been skilful & successful.—BURN v. BURN (1885), 8 O. R. 237.—CAN.

500. — Parent holds as bailiff for infant—Possession retained beyond minority—Liability to account.]—When a father has entered upon the estate of his infant children the presumption is that he entered as their guardian & bailiff, & therefore Stat. Limitations does not begin to run against the children until they attain twenty-one, & from that time at least a child has twenty years within which he may recover possession. Semble: entry by a stranger might not have this effect.

If the father retain possession after the children attain twenty-one such possession will be considered to be continued in the character in which he entered, so that an account will be directed, not from the filing of the bill, but, if necessary, from the time of entry.

In an adverse suit, in the nature of an ejectment suit, against a person in no fiduciary relation to pltf. this account is only directed from the time of filing the bill.

His widow married again, but continued to reside in & manage the public-house; & she received the rents of the cottages & maintained the children. One of the children whilst still an infant married, but she & her husband for some months resided in the public-house. They then left it & had not since received anything from the estate of testator. She & her husband brought an action against her mother for one-fourth of the rents & profits:—Held: (1) after her second marriage the mother was in possession as bailiff for her infant children, & not as guardian by nurture, or by leave of her children, or as a trespasser, & was therefore a trustee & liable to account; (2) though on the daughter's marriage the right to receive the rents passed to her husband, this did not change the tenant, who might himself enter & enjoy the possession with the other, & the ct. will not in such a case interfere with the dealing of such co-tenant in regard to the property; still, where the co-tenant in possession was the mother of the other co-tenants, all of whom were infants at the time of her second marriage, the ct. at the instance of one of the children who had attained majority, restrained the husband &

character of the mother's possession; (3) it was not changed when the daughter came of age & the mother was liable to account to the daughter & her husband for the rents & profits.—WALL v. STANWICK (1887), 34 Ch. D. 763; 56 L. J. Ch. 501; 56 L. T. 309; 35 W. R. 701; 3 T. L. R. 434.

504. ————.]—A father & his wife were entitled as tenants in common in fee to gavelkind land. The wife died in May 1870, leaving two sons, S. & J. At the time of his mother's death J. was an infant. He attained twenty-one in 1877, & died in May 1884. On the mother's death her moiety descended to her two sons as her co-heirs, according to the custom of gavelkind, subject to the right of the father to a moiety of the rents so long as he remained a widower. On the death of the mother the father entered into receipt of the whole of the rents of her moiety without accounting to his sons or making any acknowledgment in writing of their title for more than twelve years. In Feb. 1884, the father married again. He died in Nov. 1884:—Held: (1) as to the one-eighth of the property to which J. became entitled in possession on the death of his mother, the father must be presumed to have entered into receipt of the rents as bailiff for his infant son, & consequently, the title of J. was not barred by Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 12; (2) as to S.'s own one-eighth, the same presumption did not arise, & as there was no evidence that the father had received the rents as agent for S., or had, before the expiration of twelve years, acknowledged his title in writing or accounted to him for the rents, S.'s title to that one-eighth was barred by the statute.—Re HOBBS, *HOBBS v. An income of £3,000 a year for the maintenance of the children was agreed upon, & £18,847, paid to the widow between the death of the father & the date at which the son attained the age of twenty-one. The son was not properly maintained; he required special medical attention, but his welfare was the last consideration & economy the first. The committee of the son's estate asked for a declaration that the son had not been properly maintained during the period between the death of his father & his attaining twenty-one, & to have an account taken on that footing:—Held: where money was paid on a condition, the ct. would see the condition strictly fulfilled. The widow had not performed the condition upon which the money was paid, & there must be a declaration that the widow was liable to account for the £18,847, but she was entitled to be allowed a proper sum for the maintenance & education of pltf. & his sister during the same period.—*MACRAE v. PART VIII. SECT. 5.

n. By guardian — Right to give good discharge for legacy.—When an infant is entitled to a vested legacy, payment thereof, during his minority, by the exor., to the testamentary guardian, is valid, inasmuch as the guardian is enabled by statute to give a good acquittance. Such a payment is valid, although the period directed by testator for payment of the vested legacy to the infant is the attainment of age or marriage.

A. bequeathed to his eight younger children all his property, share & share alike, on their attaining their respective ages, or marriage with consent of their guardian; & directed that the interest arising from their respective shares should be applied in the meantime to their maintenance & education, & appointed a guardian & an exor.:—Held: a payment, during the minority of the children, of a part of the corpus of the personal estate of A., by the exor., to the guardian, was a valid payment.—M'CRIGHT v. M'CRIGHT (1849), 13 I. Eq. R. 314; 2 Ir. Jur. 17.

o. By trustees—Appointed by court.—Under the will of a testator an infant was, in the events that happened, entitled to receive one undivided share of the income of real estate with remainder in an undivided share of the fee-simple of the lands, contingent on surviving his father & on attainment of twenty-one years or marriage. The trustees of testator's will were directed to pay his share of income to the infant, but had no power of sale of the settled land or of consenting thereto:—Held: the trustees of the will did not come within the enabling provisions of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43, & the ct. had power to appoint them trustees for the purposes of sect. 42 of the Act to enable them at their discretion to apply the share of income, & accumulations thereof, to which the infant was

557. — Acts amounting to adoption — After attaining age.—The right of a proprietor of estates adjoining the sea to work the coal below low water mark was challenged by the Crown during the proprietor's minority. The estates to which the minor had succeeded consisted in part of entailed & in part of unentailed lands. The administration of the unentailed lands was vested in the testamentary trustees of the minor's father, who were also curators of the minor. These trustees, without the concurrence of the minor, entered into a transaction with the Crown whereby they on their part accepted a lease of the whole coal below low water mark ex adverso of both the entailed & unentailed lands, & the Crown agreed not to claim damages in respect of coal which had been worked in the past. After the proprietor came of age, he accepted an assignment of the lease & subsequently applied for & obtained from the Crown a reduction of the royalty payable under the lease, & a modification of the whole mode of working the coal. When the proprietor so acted in regard to the lease he was unaware that he had a claim to some of the coal below low water mark. In an action brought by the proprietor fourteen years after he had reached majority, concluding, (inter alia) for a declarator that he was not bound by the lease:—Held: the actings of the proprietor after he came of age barred him challenging the lease.—LORD ADVOCATE v. 568. Renewal by trustee in own name — Lease enures for infant's benefit.]—An exor. in trust for an infant residuary legatee renews a lease, part of testator's personal estate in his own name, & having mortgaged it, assigns the equity of redemption to a trustee to sell for payment of his own debts. The trustee sells to one who had notice of the infant's title. Purchase set aside.—WALLEY v. WALLEY (1687), 1 Vern. 484; 23 E. R. 609.

569. — — — Refusal of lessor to renew to infant personally.]—I must consider this as a trust for the infant, for if a trustee, on refusal to renew, might have a lease to himself, few trust estates would be renewed to cestui que use; though I do not say there is a fraud in this case, yet he should rather have let it run out, than to have had the lease to himself. This may seem hard that the trustee is the only person of all mankind who might not have the lease; but it is very proper that rule should be strictly pursued, & not in the least relaxed, for it is very obvious what would be the consequence of letting trustees have the lease, on refusal to renew to cestui que trust (LORD KING, C.).—KEECH v. 573. Renewal by party jointly interested with infant.]—If a person jointly interested with an infant in a lease, obtain a renewal to himself only, & the lease prove beneficial, he shall be held to have acted as trustee, & the infant may claim his share of the benefit; but if it do not prove beneficial he must take it upon himself.—Ex p. Annotation:—Distd. Re Biss, Biss v. Biss, [1903] 2 Ch. 40.

574. — — — No fiduciary relationship between them.]—There is no authority for the general proposition that if a person only partly interested in an old lease obtains from the lessor a renewal, he must be held a constructive trustee of the new lease, whatever may be the nature of his interest or the circumstances under which he obtained the new lease. A person renewing is only held to be a constructive trustee of the new lease if, in respect of the old lease, he occupied some special position by virtue of which he owed a duty towards the other persons interested: as, for example, in the case of a renewal by a tenant for life of settled leaseholds, or by a partner of a partnership lease, or by a mtgee. of a mtged. lease. In all such cases the new lease is treated as engrafted on or as forming part of the original lease.

A lessor granted a lease for seven years of a house in which the lessee carried on a profitable business. On the expiration of the term the lessor refused to renew, but allowed the lessee to remain as tenant from year to year at an increased rent. During that tenancy the lessee died intestate, leaving a widow & three children, one being an infant. The widow took out administration to her husband's estate, & she & the two adult children, one or whom was a son, continued to carry on the business under the existing yearly tenancy. The widow & son each applied to the lessor for a new lease for the benefit of the estate, which he refused to grant, but, having determined the yearly tenancy by notice, he granted to the son "personally" a new lease for three years at a still further increased rent.

In an action which had in the meantime been instituted by the three children, including the infant, against the administratrix for administration of intestate's estate, the administratrix applied to have the new lease treated as having been taken by the son for the benefit of the estate, & for an account of the rents & profits received by him:—Held: the evidence took the case out of Ex p. Grace, No. 573, ante, in that it showed that the right or hope of renewal had been determined by the lessor himself before the son intervened, so that the new lease could not be treated as an accretion to the estate of the deceased, & also

622. ———.]—Devise in 1874 of real estates to trustees upon trust for sale, but with a direction that testator's M. estate should not be sold until the expiration of twenty-one years from the date of his will; for the purpose of transmission the real estate to be impressed with the quality of personalty from the time of his death; the rents of the real estates previous to conversion to be applied in the same manner as the income of the proceeds of sale; after payment of debts & legacies the surplus proceeds of sale to be invested &, in the events that happened, the capital to be held in trust for all testator's children who being sons should attain twenty-five, & being daughters should attain twenty-five or marry under that age, & if more than one in equal shares. The trustees were empowered to apply the whole, or such part as might be required, of the annual income of the share to which any child might be entitled in expectancy for his or her maintenance or education, with a direction to accumulate the unapplied surplus of the income in augmentation of the share whence such income should have proceeded, & eventually to devolve in the same manner. Death of testator in Feb. 1888, leaving six children, two sons who had attained twenty-one, but were under twenty-five; & three sons & one daughter, who were infants:—Held: the children could not exercise the powers of tenants for life over the M. estate, & that estate could not be sold either under sects. 63, 58 or 59.—Re HORNE'S SETTLED ESTATE (1888), 39 Ch. 623. Interest in partnership owning land.—The interest of an infant, as one of the next of kin of his father, in land which formerly belonged to a partnership of which the father was a member, & has been retained by the administrator in specie, is settled land within Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 59, so as to enable the ct. under sect. 38, to appoint trustees to exercise the powers conferred by the Act. The order appointing new trustees will, however, be made without prejudice to any question as to the interests of the infants.—Re WELLS (1883), 48 L. T. 859; 31 W. R. 764.

624. ———.]—Vested interest—Liable to be divested.—Testator, by his will, devised all the residue of his real estate in trust for his six younger children, & directed that in case any one or more of his six younger children should happen to die in his lifetime leaving issue living at his decease, & which issue being issue male should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or dying under that age should leave issue surviving, or being issue female should live to attain that age or be previously married, then in such case the share to which such child so dying would, if he or she had survived testator & had attained the age of twenty-one years, have become absolutely entitled should be held upon trust for such issue:—Held: the two infant children of one of the six younger children of testator who had died in the testator's lifetime took a vested interest in the share of their deceased parent liable to be divested on their death under the age of twenty-one years, & they had, therefore, the powers of a tenant for life under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 58 (2) in respect of that share.—Re JAMES (1884), 51 L. The tenant for life died without having granted the lease, & was succeeded in the possession of the estates by an infant tenant in tail, during whose minority the trustees could exercise the power of leasing:—Held: the trustees had power to grant a lease in accordance with the agreement.—*DAVIS v. (2) Power in the settlement to the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, if of age, & if not of his guardians, to sell or exchange:—Held: this power was exercisable by the trustees during the minority at the request & by the direction of the guardians of the infant tenant in tail.

Insurance of property—Destruction by fire—To whom insurance moneys payable.]

During the minority of a life tenant of settled estates in Devonshire, the trustees, acting under the powers of the Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 42 (2), & the Trustee Act, 1893 (c. 53), s. 18, insured (a) the mansion-house & (b) certain settled chattels & furniture against fire. The policies were taken in the names of the trustees, & the premiums were paid out of income. The house & chattels were for the most part destroyed by fire, & the trustees recovered £7,000 on the house policy, & £1,244 on the chattel policy.

The trustees, the infant life tenant, aged twenty, & the remaindermen all desired the house to be rebuilt & refurnished, but the infant life tenant, who was not bound to insure, claimed that, as the premiums had been paid out of his income, the policy moneys in the hands of the trustees were his, & that he was entitled to a charge for any amount expended.

The remaindermen appeared, but took no part in the argument:—Held: (1) under the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78), s. 83, the remaindermen were entitled to have the £7,000 recovered on the house policy applied in rebuilding, & the infant tenant was not entitled to a charge; (2) the infant life tenant was entitled to the £1,244 recovered on the chattel policy, to which the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78), s. 83, did not apply.—*Re QUICKE'S TRUSTS, POLTIMORE v. It is not necessary for title deeds of a property of which an infant is tenant in tail in possession to be deposited in the bank in the names of the trustees of the settlement & the guardians of the infant. by female infant.]—The marriage settlement of a female infant is binding upon her & no act done by her & the husband can avoid it; mtges. by them to persons who had notice of the settlement ordered to be assigned to the trustee in the settlement, but the interest during the life of the husband & wife, to be applied to the payment of the mtges., without prejudice to her remedy against the husband.

They take the husband's estate as well as hers, the husband is an active party in making the conveyance. Where the wife levies the fine, without the husband, it operates as a conveyance, not as an estoppel to the husband (LORD THURLOW, C.).

To decree a specific performance of the articles, the ct. must carry the principle to this length, that a wife making a wise settlement in her infancy, on the marriage, without any estate settled on the other side, is bound by the agreement, & that even if the husband had died, she must have continued to be bound. I cannot think an infant, only covenanting as to her estate, can be bound. If she is so at all, it must be in reference to her marriage. Nobody has yet said that merely by its being upon marriage she is bound. . . . I think she is not bound unless she has availed herself of the settlement of the husband (LORD THURLOW, C.).

I cannot conceive that the parent's or guardian's consent can make an essential difference (LORD THURLOW, C.).—DURNFORD v. LANE (1780), 1 Bro. C. C. 106; 28 E. R. 1015, L. C.

A sale made by the trustees under the power, during the minority of the female infant, is not valid.

I take it to be clear that the real estate of a female infant would not be bound by a settlement made with the approbation of the ct. (LEACH, M.R.).

Where an infant is bound to elect the ct. will decide for the infant what election ought to be made, but this ct. has no power to give an infant a form of alienation even for her own benefit (LEACH, M.R.).—SIMSON v. JONES (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 365; 9 L. J. O. S. Ch. 106; 39 E. R. 433.

656. ———.]—A covenant by an infant heiress & her intended husband, in marriage articles, to settle the descended estate on the issue of the marriage, though effectual to defeat any alienation by the husband & wife during the coverture, inconsistent with the articles, is not in itself an alienation of the estate, & therefore, has not the effect of withdrawing it from the claims of the ancestor's creditors in a suit subsequently instituted by them for payment of his debts.

Qu.: whether a settlement executed pursuant to such articles after the institution of such suit, would have that effect.

Upon these articles the present rights of the parties must depend & the case upon these arts. is simply that of an agreement by an infant heir upon marriage never carried into effect. It is too late to contend that such a contract is binding on the wife (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—PIMM v. INSALL (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 449; 1 H. & Tw. 487; 19 L. J. Ch. 1; 15 L. T. O. At the time of this deed this lady as an infant was incapable of contract, she was also incapable of contract as a feme covert, especially of contract with her husband. Wife's after-acquired property Covenant for wife's benefit.]—On the marriage of a female infant, her reversionary interest in choses in action was settled under the ct. for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. She afterwards contracted two subsequent marriages, but no further settlement was executed on those occasions. Part of the reversionary interests fell into possession during the first coverture, & part during the second, & were transferred to the trustees:—Held: (1) although the deed made during infancy was not binding in respect of the reversionary interests, as against the wife surviving, still she might, while discovert, adopt it if for her benefit; (2) the wife having survived & not having called for a transfer of the fund, must be deemed to have acquiesced in & adopted it, as it was for her interest to do so.—ASHTON v. M'DOUGALL (1842), 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J. Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447; 49 E. R. 497.

659. ———.]—An agreement by husband & wife, in an ante-nuptial settlement for the settlement by the husband & wife of the wife's after-acquired property, is a covenant by the wife as well as by the husband, whether the wife is a minor or of full age. If the wife is a minor, & the covenant is for her benefit, it is voidable only & not void, & is binding upon all property coming to her during the coverture for her separate use, without a restraint on anticipation, until she avoids or disaffirms the covenant as to such property; for she may, after attaining twenty-one, & during the coverture, elect whether the covenant shall be binding on her separate estate or not, such right of election being a necessary consequence of a married woman's power to dispose of, without her husband's consent, property settled to her separate use.—*SMITH v. 664. —.]—The next point is the agreement of the husband, who at that time was an infant of the age of seventeen years, or thereabouts, in consideration of the marriage to convey & assign all the then present & future property of the wife for her separate use. I regret that I cannot see the means of giving effect to that agreement, but I find the law on this subject to be, according to authorities with which we are familiar, that generally the promise of an infant is void absolutely as against himself. Of course it follows that no one but himself can take advantage of that law. But to make this agreement effectual as constituting this property the separate estate of the wife, it would, primâ facie, have an effect to the prejudice of the infant husband, & necessarily be an agreement impossible as against him. He remained an infant up to & at the time of this action, & he could not be presumed to have done, nor was it possible for him to have done, anything in the interval to affirm this agreement. Under these circumstances, I apprehend he cannot therefore be treated to have done anything constituting this property in equity, any more than at law, the separate estate of the wife. Consequently the legal effect of the marriage must prevail, which is to vest in the husband the legal right to assign or deal with the wife's leaseholds, & in the meantime to receive the rents (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—KINGSMAN v. KINGSMAN (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 122; 50 L. J. Q. B. 81; 44 L. T. 124; 45 J. P. 357; 29 W. R. 207, C. A.

It is said that the settlement of freeholds was absolutely void. I know of no ground for saying so; to hold that it was would be to go directly against Smith v. Lucas, No. 659, ante. That instrument was therefore voidable, but it was never avoided, it remained binding in 1836. . . . In my opinion the estate was bound already by the agreement which was voidable & not void (NORTH, J.).—COOKE v. COOKE (1887), 38 Ch. D. 202; 59 L. T. 693; 36 W. R. 756.

666. —.]—Applt., the widow of a domiciled Scotsman, brought an action in the Ct. of Session for the reduction of an ante-nuptial contract, by which, in consideration of a provision made by her husband, she purported to discharge her legal rights of terce & jus relictæ. The contract was executed in Ireland by applt., who was then an infant domiciled in Ireland, but it was contemplated that she & her husband should reside, & they actually resided, during their married life, in Scotland. The grounds upon which applt. sought to obtain reduction of the contract were, that being an infant she was incapable of contracting by the law of Ireland, & minority & lesion according to the law of Scotland, but no evidence was adduced before the Ct. of Session as to the Irish or English law with regard to the capacity of an infant to enter into contracts:—Held: the capacity of applt. to bind herself by the marriage contract must be determined by the law of her domicile, i.e. the Irish or English law, & under such law she could not as an infant incur an obligation which was not shown to be for her benefit, & she was therefore at liberty to avoid the contract & claim her legal rights as a Scottish widow.

As regards the contract of infants the law of Ireland, which does not differ from that of England, is well settled. Infants are incapable, generally speaking, of binding themselves absolutely by contract.

A settlement on marriage not being a settlement under the Infants Settlement Act, 1855 (c. 43), forms no exception to the rule. Primâ facie, therefore, this ct. was not bound by the settlement in question. Primâ facie it was voidable by her, & she has elected to avoid it (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—*COOPER v. This settlement will not bind the wife in regard the mother might, which she did survive the husband; the wife may therefore elect to take the provision under the settlement, or her dower & free-bench.

It is said that great judges have laid it down, that by such a settlement made during the infancy of a female infant, her own estate would be bound & for this *Cannel v. Buckle, Harvey v. She never formally ratified the settlement, but regularly received the annuity. A memorandum in writing of this agreement was signed before the marriage by the husband alone, & the settlement therein referred to was, after the marriage, also executed by the husband, but not by the wife. By it the husband & wife covenanted to assign to trustees all her property upon trust for the wife for life, & after her death as she should appoint, & in default of appointment for the children of the marriage, & if there should be none for the husband. By a subsequent deed acknowledged by the wife under the Fines & Recoveries Act, 1833 (c. 74), the policy was assigned & certain real estate of the wife's was conveyed to the trustees of the settlement. The wife subsequently, in exercise of her power under the settlement, mortgaged the policy:—Held: the wife by acting on the contract & taking benefit of it had elected to confirm the settlement, & was bound in equity to perform it fully, & that consequently the mtge. was valid.—*GREENHILL v. 689. ———.]—By a marriage settlement made in Jan. 1874, the wife being an infant, personal property derived under her father's marriage settlement was assigned by the husband & wife to trustees upon the usual trusts. There was a covenant by the husband that he & his wife would so soon as she should attain the age of twenty-one years convey & assign real & personal property to which she was entitled under the will of her father; & it was provided that if the wife should refuse or neglect to do so it should be lawful for the trustees to accumulate any part of the income payable to her for the other persons interested under the settlement. There was an agreement to settle the wife's after-acquired personal property. The wife, on Apr. 13, 1874, a week after she attained the age of twenty-one, & her husband executed a deed, which she acknowledged, by which she assigned all her personal property expressed to be assigned by the settlement which had not become vested in possession, & conveyed property purported to be conveyed by the settlement upon the trusts thereof. At the date of the settlement she was contingently entitled to a reversionary interest in personal estate, but it was not actually assigned by the deed of confirmation because it did not come within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57. It fell into possession, & it was by the direction of the wife & her husband invested in the names of the trustees. 691. ———.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement, dated in 1872, the wife being then a minor, after reciting that she would be entitled, on attaining twenty-one, to a legacy under her deceased father's will, & the intention to settle the same, the wife, with the sanction of her guardian, purported to agree, & the husband covenanted with the trustees, that as soon as the wife attained twenty-one she & the husband & all other necessary parties would assign the legacy to the trustees upon the trusts declared by the settlement; & it was agreed that, if the wife then was, or if during the coverture she or her husband in her right should become seized, possessed of, or entitled to any real or personal property of the value of £100 or upwards for any estate or interest whatsoever, except jewels, etc., then & in every such case the husband & wife & all other necessary parties should assure the same to the trustees upon the trusts declared by the settlement. The wife attained twenty-one in 1874, & thereupon she & her husband by deed purported to be acknowledged, purported to assign the legacy to the trustees. The deed was, however, only executed by the wife, & was therefore of no effect. In 1883 the husband & wife by deed appointed a new trustee of the settlement under the power thereby vested in them. In 1885, upon the death of testator, the wife became entitled, under his will, to a reversionary interest in certain property. The wife contended that she had done no act to confirm the marriage settlement, & that the same was voidable & she repudiated the same, & elected not to be bound by the covenant to settle after-acquired property therein contained. The question, however, was, whether the appointment of a new trustee could not be regarded as an election by the wife to confirm the marriage settlement:—Held: when there was, as here, an appointment of a new trustee, in accordance with the usual power, by a married woman, it could not, standing alone, be accepted as expressing her intention to confirm the settlement.—*HAYWOOD v. The lady was under age. The marriage took place. No settlement was ever executed. The reversion fell into possession. The wife lived thirty years, and then died, leaving her husband surviving. By her will, she executed the power reserved to her by the arts., & appointed a sum of stock among her nieces. The husband filed his bill against the heir-at-law of his wife & the appointees under her will, seeking to have the marriage arts. carried into execution, & a life estate in the real estate secured to him, or that he might be declared entitled to be compensated for the value of such life estate out of the personalty appointed by his wife, & that the appointment by the wife so far as it interfered with such compensation, might be declared void:—Held: as it appeared in evidence that the husband knew at the time of the marriage that his wife was an infant, & as there was no settlement executed, nor were the arts. proved to have been recognised by her after she attained twenty-one, & as there was no evidence or allegation that she had ever refused to concur in carrying the arts. into effect, the real estate was not bound by them, but must pass to the heir-at-law of the wife; & the husband could not be entitled to any compensation out of the appointed personalty, the real & personal estate not having been conveyed & assigned upon the trusts of the arts., being solely attributable to the negligence or indifference of the husband.—*CAMPBELL v. 701. — Post-nuptial settlement of property—In manner different from ante-nuptial agreement—Rights of purchaser for value.]—An ante-nuptial agreement by an infant is not sufficient to take a post-nuptial settlement, in which no reference is made to the ante-nuptial agreement out of operation of 27 Eliz. c. 4, & such post-nuptial settlement is void against a subsequent purchaser for value. In 1857 an infant engaged to be married, wrote to his intended wife, promising that on coming of age he would give her seven specified houses. The marriage took place in 1859, after he came of age. In 1872 he executed a deed, not referring to any previous agreement, by which he conveyed the above & two other houses to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, for her separate use, & after her death upon trust for himself for life, & after the death of the survivor, upon such trusts as the wife should by deed or will appoint, & in default of appointment, in trust for her in fee. He subsequently agreed to sell three of the houses, & the purchaser sued for specific performance:—Held: the purchaser was entitled to specific performance, for as the settlement did not refer to any previous agreement, dealt with other property than that mentioned in the letter of 1857, & settled the property in a different way, there was no ratification in writing of the promise contained in that letter, & the settlement therefore was voluntary, & void as against a purchaser for value.—*TROWELL v. 703. — Unless infant afterwards acquires foreign domicile—Infant incapable of ratifying by foreign law.]—The rule that an infant's contract is voidable, but binding upon the infant unless repudiated within a reasonable time after attaining majority, does not apply where the infant after entering into the contract acquires a foreign domicile & becomes under the law of the country of domicile incapable of validly ratifying the contract made by her.

An infant executed marriage articles in 1864, & married an Austrian & became a domiciled Austrian. Under the law of Austria she had power to revoke but no power of irrevocably affirming any marriage contract made by her:—Held: the marriage articles were rendered void by a repudiation by her which took place in 1893.

Now what is the effect of the English law as expounded by the House of Lords in Edwards v. Carter, No. 181, ante. What is the theory of it? The theory is, I apprehend, this: that there are some contracts of infants which by English law are absolutely void. There are a few, not a great many, contracts which in the view of the English law cannot possibly be for the benefit of the infant, take a bond with penalties as an illustration, & they are void. . . . The great bulk of infant's contracts are only voidable. What does that mean? It means that when the infant comes of age he can elect either to affirm or to disaffirm the contract. If he does nothing within a reasonable time after he attains twenty-one, the presumption is that he has affirmed the contract. The contract is binding & has been binding on him since he attained twenty-one, unless he proves the contrary by repudiating within a reasonable time. . . . Now by alteration of the wife's domicile in this case, her ability to ratify her contract was lost. . . . In my opinion, the effect of the change of domicile was that the English doctrine of reasonable time became inapplicable by reason of the impossibility after that change of the wife's effectually ratifying her contract (LINDLEY, M.R.).—VIDITZ v. O'HAGAN, [1900] 2 Ch. 87; 69 L. J. Ch. 507; 82 L. T. 480; 48 W. R. 516; 16 T. L. R. 357; 44 Sol. Jo. 427, C. A.

—EDWARDS v. CARTER, No. 181, ante.

705. — — No absolute rule.]—There is no absolute rule as to what is a reasonable time within which an infant after coming of age may repudiate a marriage settlement executed during infancy. The option was held to be exercised within a reasonable time, being exercised when the question first arose whether some property should be dealt with under or against the settlement, although that was thirty-six years after the date of the settlement.—*Re JONES, FARRINGTON v. In the same year, forgetting the settlement, which she had never properly understood, she executed a power of attorney to her brothers in New Zealand to manage this estate for her. The settlement contained a covenant by the husband & wife to settle her after-acquired property. She was, among other benefits, given certain life interests without power of anticipation. She was divorced. She brought an action to avoid the covenant. Before trial, she married again. Declared, if she elected to avoid the covenant, her interests in other property under the settlement & also in a house settled by a deed of even date recited in the settlement, ought to be impounded to compensate those who lost by her election; but the declaration was not to apply during the existing coverture to the income she was restrained from anticipating.—HAMILTON v. B. Settlements by Adult Husband of Property of Infant Wife.

720. Prior to Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—What property bound—Only property of husband jure mariti—Not property to wife's separate use.]—Upon a marriage of an infant the husband by an ante-nuptial settlement covenanted that upon his wife attaining the age of twenty-one he would join & concur with her, if she would consent thereto, in settling upon her & the children of the marriage certain property to which she would become entitled for her separate use. The wife attained her age of twenty-one, & refused to join in settling the property:—Held: the settlement was inoperative.

The question, therefore, is, whether the fact of a settlement having been made when she was an infant alters the case. I must say I think it is more than mere waste paper as against her. I cannot treat it otherwise without overruling every principle which has been laid down with regard to infants. The only reason which could ever make such a settlement binding would be that inasmuch as the husband binds himself he binds the fund, because it would be his if he did not, but that applies only to a case where the husband would be entitled jure mariti, but not so under a case where the property was given to the wife so as to exclude the jus mariti (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—Re WARING (1852), 21 L. J. Ch. 784; 16 Jur. 652.

Annotation:—Mentd. Ex p. Hemming (1856), 2 Jur. N. S. 1186.

721. ——— Personalty.]—Arts., made on the marriage of a female infant, recited, that it had been agreed, that all the real & personal estate to which she was then or thereafter might be entitled should be settled, & the husband covenanted "in case she would voluntarily consent thereto, but not otherwise," that he & she would settle the same:—Held: the consent applied only to real estate, & the personal estate must be settled, though the wife refused to consent thereto.

But to say with reference to the personal estate, she should consent to the husband's settling that which would become his property in her right, jure mariti & over which she could have no control, would be to use words without any sensible meaning (ROMILLY, M.R.).—Re DANIEL'S TRUST (1853), 18 Beav. 309; 52 E. R. 122.

722. ——— Concurrence of husband in defeating settlement.]—A covenant in a marriage settlement, that in case, at any time "thereafter" during the coverture, any real or personal estate should "descend, come to or vest in" the wife, who was then an infant, it should be settled, held to include the proceeds of real estate taken by a public co., to which the wife, at the execution of the settlement, was entitled in remainder.

Effect of an agreement, on the marriage of a female infant, to settle her real estate. It would be a fraud upon the husband's contract, if he were to consent to a disposition of the estate by his wife, calculated to defeat the settlement.—Re LONDON DOCK CO., Ex p. BLAKE (1853), 16 Beav. 463; 21 L. T. O. S. 16; 51 E. R. 857.

723. ——— Rights of mortgagee.]—In a settlement made on the marriage of a female infant, the husband covenanted that in case his wife attained twenty-one he would concur with her, if she would consent, & would use his utmost endeavours to induce her to concur with him, in settling her real estate. This was never done. In 1862, after the wife had attained her majority, the husband & wife mortgaged the wife's real estate to secure money advanced to the husband. The mtgee. was informed by the husband & wife that there was no settlement, & although the person who acted as solr. for both parties was aware of its existence he concealed it with the acquiescence of the husband & wife from the mtgee. In 1865 the mtgee. discovered the existence of the settlement. The mtge. deed, by mistake, was not effectually acknowledged by the wife till after the mtgee. had received notice of the settlement:—Held: in the face of the evidence of concealment the mtgee. was not affected by notice to the person who acted as his solr. although the wife's estate did not pass to the mtgee. till after he had received notice of the settlement, yet the misrepresentations of the wife constituted a fraud, which bound her estate, & prevented her from disappointing the mtgee., & consequently, the mtgee. had priority over the persons interested under the settlement.—*SHARPE v. herself & her husband for their lives, with remainder to their children, with remainder in default of children to her next of kin. The husband having died without issue:—Held: the trust for the next of kin was inoperative & did not bind the wife.—GIBBS v. GRADY (1871), 41 L. J. Ch. 163; 20 W. R. 257.

725. Effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75)—Settlement unaffected—Repudiation by wife on attaining age.]—By a settlement made in 1891 in contemplation of the marriage of Mr. & Mrs. T. G., then an infant, it was agreed by both parties that a sum of £1,000 to which Mrs. T. G., would become entitled on attaining twenty-one years or marriage, should be assigned upon the trusts of the settlement. Mrs. T. G., on attaining twenty-one, disaffirmed the settlement:—*Held: the fund was, notwithstanding above Act, sect. 2, bound by the settlement by virtue of the operation of sect. 19 of the Act.—STEVENS v. The legacy was not expressed by the will to be given to the wife for her separate use. The wife on attaining twenty-one repudiated the settlement:—*Held: the fund was, notwithstanding the repudiation & sect. 2 of above Act, bound by the settlement, by virtue of sect. 19 of the Act.—BUCKLAND v. On the marriage of a female infant, a settlement of her personal estate was executed, giving an interest to the issue in the event of the husband surviving his wife, but none in the contrary event:—Held: (1) the issue could not, on the latter event, take by implication or construction; (2) the husband had not, by the settlement, reduced the fund into possession.—*PRINGLE v. 737. ——— As against judgment creditor—Settlement after debt contracted.]—A woman at the time of her marriage in Dec. 1882, being then an infant, was entitled to a sum of money absolutely to a sum for her separate use, & to certain freeholds. After her marriage, & while still an infant, she contracted a debt for which judgment was recovered against her separate estate. After this debt was contracted, & before the woman attained her majority, a post-nuptial settlement of all the property was made in 1884, under the above Act, to the wife for her life for her sole & separate use with a restraint on anticipation, & after her death to her husband & children. This settlement was approved by the Ch. Div. of the High Ct. The judgment creditor applied to have a receiver appointed of the property, upon the ground that such settlement was void as against creditors under the last clause of sect. 19 of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75):—Held: the settlement, though made after the debt was contracted, was valid as against creditors by virtue of the first part of sect. 19 of the Act, & the judgment creditor was not entitled to have a receiver appointed.—*HEMINGWAY v. The wife objected to this exclusion of the husband, & to the proposed trustees, with whom she was not on friendly terms, & she refused to execute the settlement unless it was altered in these particulars. There was no objection to the trustees except her personal dislike to them. On an application in the matter of the infant & under above Act the judge made an order for the husband & wife to execute the settlement as it stood. The wife appealed:—Held: (1) under the above Act a settlement of an infant's property may be made on the occasion of his or her marriage after the marriage has taken place; (2) the wife ought not to be prevented from exercising in favour of her husband the power of testamentary appointment in default of issue, & it was desirable not to appoint trustees with whom she was on unpleasant terms, & the settlement ought to be modified in these respects; & the wife being willing to execute the settlement so modified, the ct. declined to decide whether she could be compelled to execute it.

She died while still an infant & the ultimate limitation in the settlement, which was in favour of the infant's next of kin according to the Statutes of Distribution failed by reason of the infant's illegitimacy:—Held: there was a resulting trust in favour of the infant herself & the property appointed passed to her surviving husband, who was her administrator & not to the person entitled under the mother's will in default of exercise of the power of appointment.

In these proposals, & in an affidavit read in support, it was stated that she was tenant in tail of certain property. With the sanction of the ct. she executed a disentailing assurance of this property, & conveyed it to the trustees of her settlement. As a fact, part of the property had, prior to the date of the proposals, been taken by the London School Board under its compulsory powers, & the money paid into ct., but, by inadvertence, this had been overlooked, & no mention of the fund in ct. was made in the proposals or the subsequent deeds. The lady, after she had married, & had attained twenty-one, disentailed her interest in the fund, & claimed that she was entitled to have it transferred to her for her own use:—Held: a representation of fact had been made on behalf of the infant that she was tenant in tail of the property, & could convey it by means of a disentailing assurance, & on the faith of that, & on the terms of the property being settled, the ct. had sanctioned the marriage, & she was precluded from denying the truth of the representation, & consequently, from denying that the land taken by the board was disentailed & vested in the trustees, & they were entitled to the purchase money arising from the sale of it.—*MILLS v. SUB-SECT. 1.—DUTY TO MAINTAIN.

A. In General.

Jurisdiction of court—Application of child's property to maintenance.]—See Sub-sect. 2, B., post.

756. Nature of duty—Imperfect obligation—Apart from poor law.]—It is now well established that, except under the operation of the poor law, there is no legal obligation on the part of the father to maintain his child, unless, indeed the neglect to do so should bring the case within the criminal law (COCKBURN, C.J.).—BASELEY v. FORDER (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 559; 9 B. & S. 599; sub nom. BASELEY v. FORDER, 37 L. J. Q. B. 237; 18 L. T. 756; 32 J. P. 550.

757. ———.]—The obligation which rests on a parent to provide for his children, not of tender years, is a moral & not a legal one & there is no liability on him to pay for debts incurred by the child unless he has given the child authority to contract or has contracted to pay them

758. ———.]—The duty of a father towards his son does not come to an end when, by reason of his attaining his majority or a riper age, he might be properly called upon to provide for himself. Even when a child is an infant the parent's duty to provide maintenance & education is of imperfect obligation, & whether in a ct. of law or of equity its direct enforcement may be difficult or impossible. But the duty arising from the relation existing between parent & child, whether directly enforceable or not, is a duty of which the parent can in no circumstances divest himself—the duty is not confined to providing maintenance in infancy or any other time. It is a duty so to conduct himself in all respects towards his child as is right in him, he being his father. The ct., for many purposes, deals with questions between parent & child in a manner different from that which would be applied as between strangers in blood. As between father & son, the ct. regards not only obligations which were merely enforceable, but those which were not merely legal, but might be called moral. A son might by his misconduct, render it very difficult for a father to discharge his parental duties. But the duty remains. The son also has his duties, & the father is entitled to use every legitimate means to ensure the performance of those duties by the son. But no misconduct on the son's part will abrogate the duty of the father (BUCKLEY, J.).—WATERHOUSE v. WATERHOUSE (1905), 94 L. T. 133; 22 T. L. R. 195; 50 Sol. Jo. 169.

(2) The law of nature obliges fathers only to maintain their children, & unless the child from the mean circumstances of the parent is in danger of perishing for want, the ct. will not direct the interest that shall be made of a contingent legacy to be applied for that purpose; so that unless the parent is totally incapable, or under particular circumstances, as having a numerous family or children, & is bordering upon necessity, the law of the land, & of nature, make it incumbent upon the parent to maintain his child (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—BUTLER v. 768. —.— Rights acquired by child—As creditor.]—S. having several young children & being much in debt, conveyed part of his lands in trust for payment of his debts, & by another deed conveyed other part to trustees for maintenance of his children. This last conveyance being voluntary, was declared void as to creditors, but good against S. himself, & therefore if his creditors should fall upon those lands for a satisfaction of their debts & thereby strip the children of their maintenance, the children should have a recompense out of the residue of the estate which S. had reserved to himself for his own maintenance; & compared it to the case where creditors that have a lien upon the land take their satisfaction out of the personal estate, which was liable to other creditors of an inferior nature, who have no lien upon the land; these creditors in equity shall stand in the place of the other creditors who had a lien upon the land & have a satisfaction out of that in their stead; this case is the same, for though the conveyance was voluntary in the father, yet he is bound by nature to provide for his children, & it is a sort of a debt.—SNEED v. The reason why children shall not gain a settlement where the wife gains a settlement only by intermarriage, is because it is not her family, but her husband's, & she cannot give the children any sustenance without the husband's leave. Since she is equally punishable with her husband for deserting her children, & therefore could not leave them behind her, they must gain a settlement with her (PARKER, C.J.).—ST. GEORGE'S PARISH v. Testator by his will bequeathed to his son certain legacies, & gave him a share in the residuary estate payable at the age of twenty-eight years, with a trust to apply the income in maintenance, & appointed his wife & another son guardians & exors. 780. —.]—One who marries a widow, having children by her former husband, is not bound to maintain such children, though they were maintained by the widow before her second marriage, when her second husband acquired her former means. Therefore, if the second husband maintain such children, it is a good consideration for a promise by them when they come of age to repay the expense of their maintenance respectively: especially where the second husband was a man of small substance, & the children had a competent provision to receive when they came of age, which was to accumulate for them in the meantime, & he made no application to Chancery for an allowance out of the fund, as he might have done.

The wants of the children are only a ground for an order of maintenance on the parent, if of sufficient ability. 800. ——— Mere relationship insufficient.]—The moral obligation which a father is under to provide for his child imposes on him no liability to pay the debts incurred by the child, & he is not so liable, unless he has given the child authority to incur them or has contracted to pay them. Deft.'s son, an infant of twenty years of age, had lodged for some time with pltf., during a part of which he had earned wages, & paid for his board, etc. He afterwards fell ill, & was unable to pay for the necessities with which pltf. continued to supply him. Pltf. applied to his father for money, who wrote in answer, that he could not advance any at the time, but his son would come into possession of money in the following month, when he would be twenty-one, & would then be able to pay what he owed pltf. himself:—Held: this letter was no admission of a liability in the father.

From the moral obligation a parent is under to provide for his children, a jury are, not unnaturally, disposed to infer against him an admission of a liability in respect of claims upon his son, on grounds which warrant no such inference in point of law. . . . If a father does any specific act, from which it may reasonably be inferred that he has authorised his son to contract a debt, he may be liable in respect of the debt so contracted: but the mere moral obligation on the father to maintain his child affords no inference of a legal promise to pay his debts (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—*MORTIMORE v. An application was also made by petitioner for an alteration of the marriage settlements. The ct., being of opinion that neither of the parents was fit to have the care of the children, ordered that the interveners should have the custody of them, the parents being allowed reasonable access. With respect to the settlements estimating the husband's annual income, after paying the wife's outstanding debts & the cost of the suit, at £1,159, of which £943 was the income of settled property, to which the wife had contributed £3,000, it ordered that out of the settled property £200 a year should be paid to the interveners for the maintenance & education of the children.—CHETWYND v. 811. Annuity provided for maintenance—Subsequent cohabitation—Rights of children to annuity.]—After a separation between a husband & wife an action was brought by the wife's mother against the husband for necessities supplied to the wife, & was settled by arbn. Under the award two deeds were executed, by one of which a previous post-nuptial agreement & warrant of attorney were recited, & in pursuance of them an annuity was made payable to the wife for her separate use out of trust property to which the husband was beneficially entitled. By the other deed covenants were entered into by trustees on behalf of the wife that she would not molest the husband, & for indemnifying him against her debts, & that out of the annuity granted by the other deed the wife would support the children whom the husband covenanted to leave under her charge; & there was a proviso in the latter deed making it void on the husband & wife again cohabiting. The wife's conduct rendered her unfit to have the care of

SUB-SECT. 2.—MAINTENANCE OUT OF INFANT'S PROPERTY.

A. In General.

See, now, Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31.

812. Powers of maintenance—Education included.]—Testator directed his trustees to pay to his widow the sum of £100 per annum for the maintenance & support of each of his children until he or she should attain twenty-one, with power to increase or decrease such allowance; & he empowered his trustees, with the consent of his widow, to advance any sums not exceeding in the whole one-fourth of the presumptive share of any child for his or her placing out or advancement in life, or otherwise for his or her benefit; the residue to be held in trust for all the children of testator, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-five or marry, without any provision for the maintenance of unmarried daughters during the interval.

On a petition by the trustees, under Lord St. Leonards' Act, for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: (1) the trustees had no power either under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, or by way of interest on their contingent shares, to allow maintenance to unmarried daughters during the interval; but the advancement clause enabled them to advance the necessary sums of money for the purpose; (2) the trustees would be justified in increasing the allowance for infant daughters of testator so as to meet the expenses of education as included in maintenance support.—Re BREEDS' WILL (1875), 1 Ch. D. 226; 45 L. J. Ch. 191; 24 W. R. 200.

813. — Trustees without legal estate.]—The legal operation & effect of clauses for maintenance & advancement where no legal estate is vested in the trustees discussed & stated.

The question then arises, what is the legal operation & effect of these clauses? Where the legal estate in fee is vested in trustees, the powers are equitable powers only. But where no legal estate is vested in the trustees, as is the case in reference to the questions raised in this action, it is necessary, in order to give effect to the clauses as they stand, to imply some legal right or estate in the trustees; unless such an implication is made, the trustees could not execute the power of "applying" the rents which is conferred upon them, nor could they accumulate the surplus rents according to the direction given to them; nor could they raise the money for advancement. Ought then a legal estate or merely legal powers to be implied? If the former, it would, I apprehend, regard being had to the maintenance clause, be arguable that it was at least a legal estate to arise on the determination of the preceding life estate, & to continue during the respective lives of the children presumptively entitled so long as they were under age in their respective shares, & that such an estate would be a determinable estate of freehold pur autre vie, & sufficient to support the limitation to the minors respectively if construed as contingent remainders. But, in my opinion, to imply an estate in the trustees would be going beyond what is necessary & would not be justifiable, having regard to the other parts of the will where the estates are expressly devised to trustees. I think then the right construction is to imply a legal power in the trustees named in the will to enter upon the devised lands, & to take the profits sufficient to enable them to execute the express power of maintenance, & the direction or trust to accumulate the surplus rents; & also a legal power in the same trustees by way of revocation of uses or otherwise, sufficient to enable them to raise the money required for advancement under the express power of advancement. These powers would pass to new trustees. The power to appoint new trustees expressly declares that the powers & discretions vested in the trustees named in the will shall be exercisable by the trustees or trustee, for the time being, of the will (CHITTY, J.).—DEAN v. DEAN, [1891] 3 Ch. 150; 60 L. J. Ch. 553; 65 L. T. 65; 39 W. R. 568; 7 T. L. R. 579.

property given to infants by a will which contained an accumulation clause, & also a maintenance clause:—Held: the infants were, if a proper case were shown, entitled to maintenance notwithstanding that the period of accumulation had not expired, inasmuch as the will itself authorised the maintenance by providing a power of maintenance so worded as to be unaffected by the trust for accumulation.—Re SMEED, ARCHER v. PRALI (1886), 54 L. T. 929; 2 T. L. R. 535.

827. —.]—Testator devised real estates upon trusts under which in the events which happened A. became infant tenant in tail in possession. The will directed that during the minority of any person for the time being tenant in tail in possession the trustees should apply £500 per annum out of the income for the maintenance & education of the minor & should accumulate the surplus income for the benefit of the minor on attaining twenty-one. Testator also bequeathed nearly half a million in money to be invested in real estate to be held upon the same trusts as the devised estates. The net income of the settled property exceeded £14,000 per annum.

The ct. sanctioned a scheme for allowing £4,000 per annum out of the income for the upkeep of the family mansion & the maintenance thereof of the infant tenant in tail in a manner befitting the social position he would occupy in life. This allowance included £100 per annum for subscriptions to local charities.—Re WALKER, WALKER v. DUNCOMBE, [1901] 1 Ch. 879; 70 L. J. Ch. 417; 84 L. T. 193; 49 W. R. 394.

828. Not in absence of special circumstances.]—Where testator has by his will made a settlement of his estate, subject to a prior trust for the accumulation of the whole income during a term of years not exceeding the legal limit, the ct. has in the absence of special circumstances, no jurisdiction to order an allowance to be paid out of the income for the maintenance & education of the person who will, if he is living at the end of the term, be the tenant for life, even if there is no other way in which a provision can be made for his maintenance & education. Testator devised his real estate to trustees for a term of twenty years after his death, & after the expiration of the term, & in the meantime subject thereto, to the use of pltf. for life, with remainder to the use of his first & other sons successively in tail, with remainders over. Under the trusts of the term the rents were to be accumulated for a period of twenty years after testator's death. The income after her death to her first & other sons successively in tail male & provided that in the event of her marrying without her mother's consent the rents & profits should be accumulated by his trustees during the minority of her eldest son & empowered them to apply the rents & profits in reduction of charges upon the estate. By a subsequent clause in the will he empowered his trustees to apply any part of the annual income to which any object, being a minor, of the trusts already declared should be entitled or presumptively entitled, towards the maintenance of such object. The daughter married without her mother's consent, & had two sons infants. An action was brought in the name of the eldest infant to administer the real & personal estate of testator & the rents & profits of the real estate, which were very large, were applied by the receiver in reduction of charges. The income of the infant's parents was considerable but not sufficient to suitably maintain & educate him, having regard to the position in life which he would occupy on attaining his majority:—Held: the trustees had power, notwithstanding the accumulation clause, to make an allowance by way of maintenance, & it was a proper case for making the advance asked for.—KING-HARMAN v. CAYLEY, [1899] 1 I. R. 39.—IR.

827 i. —.]—Where testator directed a fund (in the result £125 only) to be invested until his youngest child attained twenty-one, the interest to be paid to the widow, & the capital then divided between her & his children:—Held: the ct. was bound to apply the property as directed by the will, & an application by the widow & two children, both under two years of age, for payment of the fund to her for her & their maintenance & support, was refused.—Re GILES (1878), 4 V. L. R. 37.—AUS.

827 ii. —.]—By his will testator of testator's residuary personalty was subject to a similar trust. At the end of the twenty years the residuary personalty & the accumulations of the income & of the rents were to be laid out in the purchase of real estate, which was limited to the same uses. The will contained no provision for the maintenance of pltf. during the term. He was not the heir-at-law of testator, but he was the eldest son of a favourite niece of testator, who had before her marriage lived a good deal with him & had been educated at his expense. Testator was a tenant farmer. The rental of his real estate was about £440 per annum; his personal estate was about £10,000. An order had been made in the action allowing £300 a year for the maintenance & education of pltf. during his minority. After he had attained twenty-one pltf. applied for the continuance of the allowance until further order:—Held: there being no special circumstances there was no jurisdiction to interfere any further with the trust for accumulation.—Re ALFORD, HUNT v. PARRY (1886), 32 Ch. D. 383; 55 L. J. Ch. 659; 54 L. T. 674; 34 W. R. 773.

829. Increased maintenance—Beyond limit imposed by instrument.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust out of the income to pay an annuity of £220 to his widow & then to pay to his daughter two yearly sums of £100 for the maintenance & education of her infant son & daughter respectively by a former marriage, as regarded the son so long as he should be under twenty-five, & as regarded the daughter so long as she should be under twenty-one or unmarried. The residue of the income was to be accumulated during the life of the widow, & on her death testator after certain provisions for his son & daughter, directed his trustees to pay £10,000 to his daughter's son on his attaining twenty-five; & to pay to her daughter £10,000 on her attaining twenty-one, or marrying under that age, & in the event of her dying before she should have attained twenty-one or married, the £10,000 was to fall into the residue; & testator gave the residue of the trust estate equally between his daughter, & her two children. Upon a summons taken out after testator's death in the matter of & on behalf of the infants, with the consent of testator's widow, who was seventy-seven years of age, & of their mother & her second husband, so far as they were able to consent, an order was made increasing the allowance for the maintenance & education of the infant son & daughter by £150 & £120 per annum respectively, to be paid out of the income of the estate & the accumulations thereof. But it was ordered that the trustees bequeathed to his grandson D., his farm, implements, etc., but by a codicil provided that, until D. attained the age of twenty-one years, the exors. should keep control & manage the farm, & expend the net revenue arising therefrom in the improvement & cultivation of the land, without accounting to D. or any one else for such revenue. D. applied, through his next friend, to have an annual allowance made to him for his support & education:—Held: testator having directed the surplus revenue to be used in the improvement of the farm, that disposition could not be legally interfered with & the money diverted to another purpose.—*Re WADDELL'S ESTATE, LYNCH v. remainderman entitled—Infant's estate defeasible on contingency.]—Property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for an infant, with a gift over in case of his death under twenty-one. The trustees accumulated the income of the property not required for his maintenance, in pursuance of the powers given by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26. The infant died under twenty-one:—Held: the accumulations of income to the time of the death of the infant, belonged to the infant, & were not to be held for the benefit of the remainderman who ultimately became entitled to the property from which the accumulations arose.—Re BUCKLEY'S TRUSTS (1883), 22 Ch. 836. ——— Infant entitled to share of residue.]—Testator bequeathed a legacy to his trustees, upon trust, if & when R. should attain twenty-one, to pay the income thereof, to her during her life, with remainders over, & testator bequeathed to his trustees one-sixth part of the proceeds of the residue of his estate upon trust to pay the income thereof to R. for her life. The will empowered the trustees in their discretion during the minority of R. to apply the whole or part of the income of the legacy for her maintenance, & directed that the surplus should be accumulated so as to follow the corpus of the fund from which it arose. Testator died in March, 1884. R. attained twenty-one in May, 1889. In July, 1886, an order was made that £200 per annum should be allowed for her maintenance, & that the trustees of the will should, out of the funds subject to the trusts thereby declared in favour of the infant, pay on account of the maintenance £100 a year to her guardian. The residue of the £200 was to be paid out of other property to which she was entitled. After the date of this order, & thenceforth during the minority of the infant, the trustees paid the £100 a year to the guardians out of the gross income arising from the legacy & the share of residue, without distinguishing between the two funds, & accumulated the surplus. The income produced by the legacy was less than £100:—Held: (1) R. was, within Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43 (2), so far as the accumulations had arisen from the income of the share of the residue, the person who had ultimately become entitled to the property from which they had arisen & that they must be paid to her; (2) the trustees not having exercised any discretion as to the fund out of which the allowance for maintenance should be paid, the ct. would now exercise that discretion & direct that it should be deemed to have been paid primarily out of the income of the legacy, that being most for the benefit of R.

& directed the income of other property to be accumulated during their infancy, & the corpus divided on their attaining twenty-one. Testator having sold a portion of the former property, & the son dying shortly after his father, the ct. made an order for the application of a portion of the income of the latter property to the maintenance of the infants.—Re HIGGINBOTHAM (1878), 4 V. The guardian named ceased to act, & after the lapse of two years (notice having been given to the father) it was ordered that the petitioner, the aunt of the infants, with whom they had lived since the death of their mother, testatrix, should be appointed

Two of the daughters, having attained twenty-one, claimed payment of the accumulations of such part of the income in the meantime of their shares as had not been applied for their maintenance:—Held: they were the persons who had become ultimately entitled to the property from which the accumulations had arisen within Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43 (2), & the accumulations must be paid to them. Semble: the meaning of sub-sect. 2 is as follows: The trustees shall hold the accumulations for the benefit of the person who in the events which happen becomes entitled to the income from the accumulation of which the accumulations arise.—*Re Scott, Scott v. The ct. has never gone further than this, that though the words of the will do not authorise the application of interest to the maintenance of the infants, yet if it can collect before it all the individuals who may be entitled to the fund, so as to make to each a compensation for taking from him part, it will grant an allowance for maintenance; but if the will contains successive limitations under which persons not in being may become entitled, it is not sufficient that all the parties then living, presumptively entitled, are before the ct., for none of the living may be the parties eventually entitled to the enjoyment of the property. The proviso that the issue should have maintenance out of the trust fund equally formed an integral part of the contract & was one of the considerations which moved the husband to join as a party on the settlement. He therefore had a right to have it strictly enforced in his own favour without reference to the question of his ability (LEACH, M.R.).—MEACHER v. YOUNG (1834), 2 My. & K. 490; 39 E. R. 1031

855. — — — — —.]—A covenant to settle on particular persons all the covenantor's personal estate, subject only, nevertheless, & without prejudice to any other dispositions, qualifications, or changes, which he should make by his will of or concerning the same or any part thereof, is only a provision for a case of intestacy, & does not prevent the covenantor from bequeathing the whole of his personal estate to other persons.

By a marriage settlement, personal estate was settled, by the father of the wife, in trust for her for life, with remainder to her children, equally, as tenants in common, & in default of a child attaining a vested interest in trust for the husband, with a direction that after the wife's death the trustees should apply the income at their discretion for the maintenance & education of the children during their minorities:—Held: after the wife's death the husband was entitled to require that the income should be applied to the maintenance & education of the children, notwithstanding that he was himself of ample ability to maintain & educate them.—STOCKEN v. The wife died, leaving one child:—Held: this was a discretionary trust for maintenance, & not simply a power, & the father was entitled to have an allowance for past & future maintenance of his child, without reference to his ability to provide such maintenance; & an inquiry was directed as to the quantum to be so applied.—RANSOME v. The husband survived the wife, & filed a bill to determine whether he was entitled to apply the income of the trust-funds for the maintenance of his ability:—Held: he was, & there was a trust for maintenance, & not a mere power.—NEWTON v. CURZON (1867), 16 L. T. 696.

859. — Suspension of trust during father's lifetime.—By a marriage settlement, sums of stock, the wife's property were settled in trust for the husband during the joint lives of himself & his wife; with remainder to the survivor for life; & it was declared that if the husband should survive & marry again, & there should be issue of the marriage then living, his life interest in a moiety of the funds should cease, & that moiety should be transferred to the same persons, & be applied to the like purposes & in the like manner, as it would be transferable & applicable to if the husband were dead. Then followed trusts of the funds for the children as the husband & wife should jointly appoint, & as the survivor should appoint; & in default of any appointment, for all the children, except an eldest or only son, who for the time being should become entitled, in possession or remainder, to the husband's real estates under a deed of even date, the shares to be vested in the children at the usual periods, but not to be transferred until the death of the surviving parent; & it was declared that, after the death of both parents, the trustees should apply so much, as they should think fit, of the income of each child's share, until its share should become transferable, for its maintenance, & should accumulate the surplus; & the trustees were empowered, after the death of both parents, to advance the children out of the capital of their shares, notwithstanding they should be under twenty-one. The wife died. There was issue of the marriage four sons & three daughters, all infants. The husband appointed part of the funds to his eldest son, & then married again. The ct. refused to direct, without a reference as to the husband's ability, the income of the moiety of the funds which the husband forfeited by marrying again, to be applied for the children's maintenance, there being, in consequence of the exception of an eldest or only son, etc., a suspension of the trust for the benefit of the children, during the father's lifetime.—KEKEWICH v. LANGSTON (1840), 11 Sim. 291; 4 Jur. 1155; 59 E. R. 886.

860. — Trust discretionary.] — Semble : where, in a marriage settlement, the wife's property is settled upon herself for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her children, & a mere power is given to the trustees to apply the income of the property towards the maintenance & education of the children; the father will not be entitled to require that any part of the income shall be applied to the maintenance of the children, so long as he is himself of ability to maintain them.—THOMPSON v. GRIFFIN (1841), Cr. & Ph. 317; 5 Jur. 90; 41 E. R. 512.

The wife appointed the fund equally among all her children, & directed the income, during their minorities, to be paid to her husband, to be applied by him for their maintenance & education. The children had other means of maintenance. The trustees of the settlement declining to pay the income of the trust fund to the children's father:—Held: this was a trust, & the ct. would apply a proper sum for the maintenance & education, & not necessarily the whole; & a reference to chambers was directed, to inquire how much ought to be allowed, regard being had to the provision from other sources.—WHITE v. GRANE (1854), 18 Beav. 571; 23 L. J. Ch. 863; 2 W. R. 320, 328; 52 E. R. 224.

862. — —.]—By a marriage settlement certain personal property was settled upon trust for the wife for life, & after her death for the children; & it was declared that the trustees should after the death of the wife apply the whole or such part as the trustees should think fit of the annual income of the expectant share of any child for or towards the maintenance of such child. The trustees after the death of the wife paid the whole income of the trust fund to the husband during the infancy of the child of the marriage without exercising any discretion as to its application to his maintenance:—Held: there was no absolute trust to apply the income to the maintenance of the children, but a discretionary trust equivalent to a power; & as the trustees had not exercised any discretion, the estate of the husband must be held liable to repay the whole amount of the income received.—WILSON v. TURNER (1883),

863. — Voluntary post nuptial settlement.]—The doctrine that where there is a fund subject to a trust for the maintenance of children & the children are maintained by their father without any resort to the fund, the father is entitled to be recouped out of the accumulated income, only applies where the trust for maintenance is contained in an ante-nuptial marriage settlement which has a basis of contract to support it. Therefore, where a father provided a fund of which he made a voluntary settlement after marriage upon his wife & children, & created a discretionary trust for maintenance of the children out of the income of the fund, & afterwards maintained them himself without calling for any contribution from the income of the fund:—Held: he, & consequently his trustee in bkpcy., was not entitled to receive any portion of the accumulations of the income which might have been so applied.

If this were a case of an ante-nuptial settlement, & therefore having its basis in contract, & where probably money of the wife would also be put into settlement, the case would have been completely settled by authority; because it has been treated as settled law, from Mundy v. Howe (Earl), No. 853, ante, downwards—contrary, in my opinion, as well as in expressed opinions of LORD COTTENHAM & VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY, to sound principle—that where there is a trust for maintenance in a settlement made upon marriage, & the father has maintained the children without calling for contributions from the fund, he is in the position of a purchaser of so much of the fund as it would have been proper to apply towards maintenance (MALINS, V.-C.).—Re KERRISON'S TRUSTS (1871), L. M. she devised the property & all accumulations, which should not have been applied or paid over, in trust for her son D. M. absolutely; & if he should die in the lifetime of J. M. to J. M. absolutely. After testatrix's death, J. M. received the rents & maintained the son in a manner suitable to his rank until his own death. Independently of testatrix's property he was during his life of ability to maintain his son. J. M. having died, his administratrix, in an action brought by D. M., claimed credit for a considerable sum for the maintenance & education, etc., of the minor by J. M. during several years.

It was sought on behalf of pltf. to have this credit disallowed on the ground that the father, having been of sufficient ability to maintain & educate his child was not entitled to apply any of the trust funds for the purpose:—Held: J. M. was, under testatrix's will, entitled notwithstanding his own ability to apply so much of the income of the trust funds as he should from time to time think proper for & towards the maintenance & education or otherwise for the benefit of his son D. At the date of the will & of testator's death J. had three children, one of whom, a son afterwards attained twenty-one, married, & lived separately from his father:—Held: (1) a trust was constituted in J. of the income for the maintenance, clothing & advancement of his children, which trust did not terminate upon all or any of his three children attaining majority in his lifetime; (2) J. was not entitled to apply the income arbitrarily according to his own will & pleasure; (3) he was entitled to apply the income of a child's prospective share towards the child's maintenance, clothing & advancement without reference to his ability to maintain & educate that child; (4) the son who had attained his majority was not entitled to an immediate transfer of one-third of the fund, inasmuch as it did not appear that testator intended to exclude after-born children, & at all events he did intend to authorise an unequal distribution from time to time of the income for the benefit of J.'s children.—BATEMAN v. of the children, but if he maintained them properly they would not be entitled to an account against him.—LEACH v. LEACH (1843), 13 Sim. 304; 7 Jur. 273; 60 E. R. 118.

Applications were made for an increased maintenance but without effect. Upon the marriage of the infant, the real state of the trusts was discovered, & a bill was filed against the grandmother for an increase upon the past maintenance allowance:—Held: as it appeared the trustees would have exercised their discretion, had they been called upon, in giving a considerable extra allowance, it was right to grant a reference to inquire into the amount expended beyond the £300 per annum.—STOPFORD v. W. died in 1888. His sister survived him, & had two children only, both born in his lifetime. By an order made in Jan. 1889, upon a summons taken out by the trustees, it was declared that the gift of capital to the children who attained twenty-three was void for remoteness; but that, on account of other clauses in the will, the persons to take it could not be ascertained until the death of J., & the trustees were ordered to accumulate the surplus income until further order. In 1895 the two children of J., one of whom had attained twenty-three & the other twenty-one, took out this summons for the determination of the questions whether the trust for maintenance was not good, & whether the trustees ought not to have applied, & ought not now to apply, the accumulated income for maintenance, etc.:—Held: (1) the trust for maintenance could be severed from the gift of the capital, & was good; (2) the accumulation by the trustees had plainly not been an exercise of their discretion, & they had now, notwithstanding that one child had attained twenty-three, a discretion to apply all or any part of the income which accrued down to the date of her attaining twenty-three in payment of the past maintenance of the two children, & to apply any part of the income which had accrued since that date, or should accrue before the younger child attained twenty-three, in or towards his maintenance.—Re WISE, JACKSON v. He further directed, "A fair interest to be paid to my wife until the boy shall be of age." The widow, in consideration of money lent, executed a deed purporting to assign all her interest in the will, & in particular the income & interest arising & to arise from the share in the partnership business:—Held: the widow was not entitled absolutely during the minority of the son to the interest in the share in the partnership, but that the income of such share was burdened with the maintenance of the son; & the exor. was not justified in paying the interest & profits to the widow, or to an assignee of the widow, until he was satisfied that the infant son was being otherwise properly maintained by the mother.—TOPLISS v. The trustees appealed & in answer to an inquiry by the ct. stated their intention to allow £250 to the father for her maintenance & education:—Held: the order was irregular & must be discharged the ct. having no jurisdiction on a

L., remarried, but the infant children of her marriage with B., continued to live with her. On an application by the infants that the trustees might be ordered to provide for their maintenance pursuant to the above provision of B.'s will:—Held: (1) there was no absolute trust to so apply the whole or any part of the income, but only a discretionary trust, carrying an obligation to entertain & consider the question, & then a discretion in the execution of the duty; &, consequently, the ct. could not overrule the discretion of the four trustees, who, after having considered all the circumstances & their duty under the circumstances, had, in the exercise of an honest discretion, refused to make any allowance for maintenance out of testator's estate; (2) assuming the ct. had a discretion, it would exercise that discretion, similarly to these trustees.—*Re BRYANT, BRYANT v. The will contained no expressed trust for maintenance. The Ct. of Session in Scotland appointed a curator bonis to the infant, who received the legacy, & invested it in the purchase of some New Zealand stock, in the sole name of the infant. It was the only property of the infant, & the income derived from it was not sufficient to provide for her maintenance & education. The Ct. of Session authorised the curator bonis to advance from time to time sums out of capital, not exceeding in all £100, for the purpose of supplementing the income of the infant, & enabling her to be placed at a suitable school. The curator bonis, as next friend, presented a petition, asking that the right to transfer £100 of the stock might vest in him, & that he might be at liberty to sell & transfer the same, & to apply the proceeds in or towards the maintenance or education of the infant, that the dividends which had accrued, & which might, during the minority of the infant, accrue on the stock, or on the residue thereof after the transfer, might be paid to him, he undertaking to apply them in or towards the maintenance or education of the infant; & that he might be appointed guardian:—Held: (1) the infant was a "trustee" of the stock, within the meaning of the Trustee Acts & an order was made vesting the right to transfer £100 of the stock in the next friend, who was appointed guardian to the infant, & liberty was given to him to sell & transfer the same, & to apply the proceeds in or towards the maintenance or education of the infant; (2) the dividends accrued & to accrue during the minority of the infant, should be paid to the guardian, he undertaking to apply them in or towards her maintenance or education.—Re FINDLAY (1886), 32 Ch. 926. — Infant's interest in remainder expectant on death.]—An infant ward of ct. had no property except a reversionary interest in real estate expectant on the death of a lady aged eighty-five. The infant lived with her mother, who had no means. An allowance of £80 a year had been paid to them for maintenance under an order of the ct., but the fund out of which this had been paid was now exhausted. This was a summons by the infant by her next friend asking for authority to procure annual loans for the purpose of supplying her with necessaries pending the falling in of her reversionary interest, & that each such advance & the interest thereon might be declared to be a debt incurred for & on behalf of the infant for necessaries, & to be payable out of her estate; & that the infant might be bound on attaining her majority to ratify & confirm such contracts & to do everything necessary to give a valid security upon her reversionary interest in case the same had not then fallen into possession:—Held: (1) the ct. was bound by the decision in Cadman v. Cadman, No. 914, ante; (2) Land Charges Act, 1900 (c. 26), had not altered the law in this respect, & in the absence of any property of the infant which could be reached, the ct. could not make such an order.—*Re BADGER, BADGER v. Where a child had a vested interest in certain property, & a contingent interest in other property, which lapsed at his death under twenty-one, the allowance for the past maintenance of the child was directed to be paid exclusively out of the fund in which the child had only a contingent interest, such balance not exceeding the amount which that fund alone would have justified.—BRUIN v. There was also a gift by the same will, of the income of a share of residue to the same infant for life on his attaining twenty-one, with a power to the trustees to apply the income during his minority for his maintenance & education. A suit for administration was instituted by the trustees immediately after testator's death, & orders were from time to time made in it for the advancement, & also the maintenance & education of the infant out of the £5,000 legacy. On his attaining twenty-one :—Held : (1) he was absolutely entitled to the unapplied residue of the legacy ; (2) inasmuch as maintenance would have been ordered out of the income of the contingent share of petitioner, he was entitled to be recouped out of the past income of the residuary estate what had been expended out of the £5,000 legacy for his maintenance & education.—FURLEY v. 935. —.]—Testator directed his trustees to hold a specified trust fund in trust for his son, to be absolutely vested in him on his death, but not to be payable or transferable to him until he attained the age of twenty-one years, & declared that his trustees should stand possessed of the shares in a co. which constituted the trust fund & postpone the sale thereof until his son attained twenty-one, & upon that event happening should transfer such shares to him ; & testator directed his trustees to accumulate during his son's minority any income of the shares, to be applied by them in or towards his maintenance & to add any accumulations to the capital. He also bequeathed a share of his residuary estate to his trustees for his son & declared that it should be lawful for them to apply the income for his maintenance, & after his death in trust for his children & if none for testator's other children in equal shares.

Testator died in 1905, the son died in 1918, & his exors. claimed that his maintenance during his minority should have fallen on his share of the residuary estate in exoneration of the specified trust fund ; & consequently they were entitled to the accumulations :—Held : the specified trust fund was the primary fund out of which the maintenance was to be supplied ; & the trustees could not resort to the income of the residuary estate as to which they had only a discretion, until they had exhausted the specified trust fund to which the direction applied.—Re WAKLEY, WAKLEY v. A very common instance is the case of a man of large fortune leaving an infant eldest son who takes the great bulk of his property, but leaving an insufficient provision for his widow & younger children. There, in allowing maintenance for the eldest son the ct. always had & always has regard to the position of the family, & makes a larger allowance than is absolutely necessary for the eldest son for the purpose of his maintenance & keeping up an establishment suitable for him, on the understanding that the widow & the younger children will live in the house & be maintained out of the allowance so made (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re WELD (A PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND) (1882), 20 Ch. The estate proved insufficient, & the son-in-law was obliged to sell his property & borrow money in order to maintain the legatees:—Held: (1) testator had placed himself in loco parentis to his grandchildren, & the legacies were vested subject to be divested, as the condition was subsequent; (2) the father of the legatees was entitled to an allowance out of past income for past maintenance to the extent of the money he had borrowed & raised by the sale of his property.—PARSONS v. But if she should not require the whole for the purposes aforesaid the surplus was to be paid to the husband:—Held: (1) so long as she kept up the establishment, she was not liable to account for the surplus in her hands; (2) this was like the case of guardians of infants & committees of lunatics having allowances made to them for maintenance, & who are not accountable for their expenditure, so long as they properly maintain those committed to their care.—*JODRELL v. 1005. ———.]—Testator gave one-third of his residuary estate to his wife, & the other two-thirds to trustees in trust for his children at twenty-one : & directed that, until the shares of his children should be payable to them, the income thereof should be paid to his wife, to be by her applied, or, in case of her death, to be applied, by the trustees, for the maintenance of the children :—Held : the wife was entitled to the income of the children's shares during their minorities, she maintaining them in a proper manner.—*HADOW v. 1006. ———.]—Testator gives his residuary property to trustees upon trust to sell & stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust to pay an annuity, & to invest the residue & pay the dividends & interest to his wife for life, to be by her expended in & about the maintenance of herself & the maintenance & education of his children nominatim, & of any child of which she might then be pregnant ; & after her decease he gives the principal unto & amongst all his before-named children, to be equally divided among them, share & share alike, to be paid to them as they shall severally attain the age of twenty-one years, with benefit of survivorship amongst them. Two who attain twenty-one, with the mother, petition for the payment out of their shares :—Held : the children who had attained twenty-one took vested interests expectant upon the death of the mother ; & on the undertaking of the two sons to secure to the mother the dividends which would have accrued, a portion of the fund might be paid out.

Under such a clause any child who at any time is in a condition to require maintenance is entitled to be maintained by the mother. The ct. will only order payment out by anticipation of vested shares, even where the tenant for life consents, where the residue of the fund is amply sufficient to furnish an income to maintain the wife & other children.—BERRY v. BRIANT (1862), 2 Drew. & Sm. 1 ; 31 L. J. Ch. 327 ; 5 L. T. 818 ; 8 Jur. N. S. 69 ; 10 W. R. 242 ; 62 E. R. 521.

decease, & his youngest child having attained eighteen, he devised the same land to his son, L. The widow died, & L. also died before the youngest child attained eighteen :—Held : L. did not take the estate charged with the support or education of the younger children, nor was it chargeable in the hands of L. with arrears therefor, which had accrued during the life estate of the widow.—PERRY v. WALKER (1866), 12 Gr. 370.—CAN.

1004 iii. ———.]—Testator bequeathed his chattels & $1,500 to his widow. His estate he directed to be sold & the $1,500 to be paid out of the proceeds. After providing for the investment of the estate, he proceeded : " the yearly interest accruing from the same to be paid over to my said wife yearly for the term of six years, or until my son shall become twenty-one ; the above mentioned gifts & bequests to my wife shall be given to her in lieu of dower, & on the further condition that she will clothe, maintain & suitably provide for my said son until he shall become twenty-one ; on the coming of age of my said son, my exors. shall pay over to him the whole of the principal sum of money remaining in their hands after satisfying the above expenses & legacies ; in case my said son should die before coming of age, then the money so remaining as above, & to which he would then be entitled, shall be paid over to my two eldest brothers." The son died under twenty-one :—Held : all the gifts to the widow were upon the condition of maintaining the son ; but the condition having become impossible of performance by the son's death, the gifts were denuded of the condition.—GRAHAM v. BOULTON (1885), 9 O. R. 481.—CAN.

1006 i. ———.]—Testator, amongst other things, devised to his wife the proceeds of all his rentable property, after paying necessary outlays for the maintenance & support of herself & six infant children, & gave certain parts of his estate to his children to be conveyed to them on the death of their mother ; & the will further provided that the widow should have the power, with the approval & consent of the exors. & trustees, of whom she was one, to put any of the said children into possession of the real or personal property bequeathed to them after attaining the age of twenty-one :—Held : the property was subject, as a first charge thereon, to make good any deficiency there might be in the amounts derived from other properties, to afford a proper sum for the maintenance of the infants.—COLLINGWOOD v. COLLINGWOOD (1874), 21 Gr. 102.—CAN.

1006 ii. ———.]—Testator devised certain lands to his two sons, declaring that the legacies thereafter mentioned should be a charge thereon. He then bequeathed certain pecuniary legacies to his daughters, adding, " I give & devise also unto (his said daughters) their support & maintenance, so long as they or either of them remain at home with (his two sons) " ; & he gave his personal property to his two sons in equal shares :—Held : the support & maintenance of pl'ts. was, by the will, made a charge upon the lands ; & they might for sufficient reasons cease to live at home, & yet still be entitled to such support & maintenance.—SWAINSON v. BENTLEY (1884), 4 O. R. 572.—CAN.

1006 iii. ———.]—Testator devised certain lands to his widow, to have & to hold the same for the following uses : " To sell & dispose of the same as she should think proper & right, & the moneys thereupon coming & arising to use & apply for the payment of my just debts, & for the maintenance of herself & my minor children, & the education of such children as she may see to be fit & necessary," & he authorised his wife to convey the said lands in fee simple to the purchasers & directed that in the event of any of the said lands remaining unsold at the time when his youngest surviving child should attain twenty-one, then the above devises & powers should cease, & the lands be subject to the trusts of his will previously declared under which the lands were ultimately to be divided among his children. Testator was twice married :—Held : the children & grandchildren of testator's first marriage had no right to demand an account of the lands sold under the above provisions, or investigate the amount used for maintenance. Semble, the widow took absolutely the balance of the proceeds of sale not required for debts.—COWAN v. BESSERER (1884), 5 O. R. 624.—CAN.

1006 iv. ———.]—Testator by his will, after several specific bequests, gave the residue of his real & personal estate to his trustees upon trust to pay to each of his daughters, J. & L. for life, the annual allowance of $8,000 each, which they were then receiving, to be paid to them semi-annually, & to pay for the education, maintenance & ordinary requirements of his son G., & then proceeded : " & I direct my trustees in their discretion, if they find my son G. deserving of the same, to make such annual allowance to him as to them may seem warranted by the proceeds of the income of my estate, & if my said trustees are satisfied as to his steadiness they are to treat my said son G. in respect to the said allowance in the same manner as my said daughters, J. & L. ; in the case of each of my said daughters the capital sum necessary to produce the allowance made to her be paid after her death to such person or persons as she may by will direct " :—Held : G. was only entitled to his maintenance & education during minority, for there was nothing in the will to indicate an intention to extend the trust for maintenance & education beyond that period ; G. was not entitled to any annual allowance in addition to his maintenance & education during his minority.—MACDONALD v. MCLENNAN (1885), 8 O. R. 176.—CAN.

1006 v. ———.]—Testator made his will as follows : " I leave to M. the west half of lot 9 during her natural life. I leave to my son A." (an imbecile) " his board & lodging with £5 per year during his natural life, to be given as hereinafter mentioned. I leave to B." (certain other lands) " under the following restriction : i.e. he is to pay A. £3 every year during his natural life. I leave to R. the west half-lot 9, after his mother's death, on the following condition : i.e. £2 in each year to be paid by him to A., & to keep A. in board & lodging during his natural life." The devise to R. failed, he being an attesting witness :—Held : A.'s maintenance as from the death of testator, & not as from the death of M., was a charge on the west half-lot 9 in the hands of the heirs ; & the land having for some time after testator's decease, been occupied under mistake of title by R. & his assigns, who had paid for A.'s maintenance, the heirs could not enjoy the land without making good the charge thereon to those who had thus exonerated them.—*MUNIE v. 1009. ——— Application of surplus.]—Testator gave all his property to trustees, in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, & subject to that payment, to convey, assign or transfer all his property unto & equally between his children, when & as they severally attained twenty-one; & in the meantime, to pay to his wife or otherwise apply the rents & proceeds of their respective shares for or towards their respective maintenance, education & advancement. But, in case of the decease of any of the children under twenty-one, then upon trust to convey, assign or transfer the shares of such of them as should so die, and the accumulations, if any, unto & equally between such of them as should attain twenty-one. Testator's widow maintained & educated the children for several years, & advanced three of them out of the income received by her from testator's property, exclusive of her annuity; & the income being more than sufficient for those purposes, a considerable surplus remained in her hands:—Held: the surplus belonged, not to the children, but to the widow.—BROWNE v. upon trust to divide his residuary estate equally between all his children living at his decease:—Held: wife took income subject to a trust for maintenance & education of the children & not limited to children under twenty-one or unmarried.

All the children having attained twenty-one, one of the daughters having married, & the widow having become bkpt., two unmarried daughters, who were living with their mother, issued a summons asking the ct. to determine whether they were entitled to be maintained out of the income of the residue during the remainder of their mother's life. Through bankruptcy—What part of income available for creditors.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, £4,000 was vested in trustees, upon trust to invest, & to pay the income to the husband & wife for their joint lives, & then to the survivor for life; & after the death of either, to stand possessed of one moiety of the trust fund for the survivor absolutely, & of the other moiety for the children of the marriage, as the parents should jointly appoint; & in default of such appointment, for the children in equal shares, with powers of advancement; & it was thereby declared that the income of the trust moneys was made payable to the parents & the survivor of them, upon the condition only, that they & the survivor of them should, during the minority of the children, provide them with suitable diet, clothing, maintenance & support, in proportion to the circumstances & condition of life of the parents, & the expectancies of such child or children; but that, in case of an advance to any of the children the parents or the survivor should be released from the condition. In 1844 the husband petitioned the Ct. of Bkpcy., & under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, a conditional order was made for his protection upon payment of a yearly sum. In 1845 the husband & wife assigned by way of mtge. all their interest in the income & capital of the trust fund. The fund was then transferred into ct., under Trustees' Relief Act. On petition by the six infant children, stating that their parents were in embarrassed circumstances, & had for some time past omitted to provide them with suitable diet, etc. (following the words of the deed), & that no advance had been made to them or any of them; & it appearing that the parents were in a respectable station in life, & in no business, the ct. ordered the whole income to be applied for the maintenance of petitioners. Qu.: the effect of a conditional order for protection under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, as to vesting the assets of the insolvent in the official assignee.—Re DALTON (1852), 1 De G. He also directed that if the profits were insufficient for this purpose, the deficiency should be supplied out of the income of the general estate, which, subject to this direction, was to be accumulated, & with the principal, to be divided among testator's children on their attaining twenty-one. There was a proviso that if from any cause it should be advisable to discontinue the business, which the trustees were to have power to do, the stock-in-trade should be sold, & the proceeds form part of the general estate, & that the income of the whole, or so much of the income as should be required, should be applied in the maintenance of testator's wife & family & the education of the children:—Held: on the widow by misconduct becoming unfit to maintain & educate the children, she was not entitled to the surplus profits after setting apart sufficient for their maintenance & education, but could only claim maintenance for herself.—*CASTLE v.
